CESifo Workshop on

EXCHANGE RATE ADJUSTMENT IN THE EURO AREA

Organisers: Zeno Enders and Gernot J. Müller

to be held on 12–13 June 2017 on the island of San Servolo in the Bay of Venice, Italy

Workshop description

Economic performance in the euro area has been very heterogeneous since 2010. Intra euro-area real exchange rates, however, have not adjusted very much. This is arguably a major cause of the euro area's current woes. Yet, to date, there is no consensus as to why there is so little exchange rate adjustment. Complementary and competing explanations are based on, among other things, a) pervasive nominal rigidities and, in particular, downwardly rigid wages, b) deflationary spill overs from the periphery to the core of the euro area, c) the interaction of financial constraints and firms' price-setting behaviour, d) an incomplete reversal of intra-euro area capital flows because of financial support of the periphery by the official sector, and e) diverging productivity developments.

The workshop provides a platform for discussing recent developments and research on the issue, also with a view towards informing actual policy making in the euro area. We aim to bring together the best existing and ongoing research on questions such as: Why have intra-euro real exchange rates adjusted so little after 2010? Is more wage/price flexibility desirable and, if so, how can it be achieved? Does a common currency slow down macroeconomic adjustment? To what extent are exchange rates driven by capital flows? How important are financial frictions to understand real exchange rate dynamics? How important is the Balassa-Samuelson effect in the euro area? Can adjustment be facilitated by monetary and fiscal policy or structural reforms?
