

ROUTLEDGE HANDBOOK OF EUROPEAN ELECTIONS

The Routledge Handbook of European Elections explores the multifaceted dimension of the European Parliament's (EP) electoral contests across the European Community and European Union since 1979.

After setting a general empirical and theoretical framework, this collaborative project presents original contributions from leading experts in the field. Each case study adheres to a common template that makes it easy to compare data, methodology, and outcomes.

Every country chapter includes:

- a brief geopolitical profile and historical background of the Member State;
- a glance at the national political landscape;
- a brief account of the main political parties, including their attitude toward the European Union;
- a section on public opinion and European integration;
- a summary of electoral systems;
- an overview of all EP and national elections;
- an in-depth analysis of the 2009 EP electoral race;
- an overall theoretical interpretation of European elections.

A comparative chapter closes the Handbook followed by an Epilogue focussing on the 2014 EP contest.

The volume aims to enhance readers' understanding of the European Parliament and revive their interest in the European integration process. By providing a wide range of national and European facts and figures, this investigation represents a comprehensive reference guide to scholars, practitioners, and students of the European Parliament, European elections, political parties, European Union and comparative politics.

Donatella M. Viola PhD London School of Economics, is Assistant Professor in Politics and International Relations at the University of Calabria, Italy.

Taylor and Francis
Not for distribution

ROUTLEDGE HANDBOOK OF EUROPEAN ELECTIONS

Edited by Donatella M. Viola

Taylor and Francis
Not for distribution

 Routledge
Taylor & Francis Group
LONDON AND NEW YORK

First published 2015
by Routledge
2 Park Square, Milton Park, Abingdon, Oxon OX14 4RN

and by Routledge
711 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10017

Routledge is an imprint of the Taylor & Francis Group, an informa business

© 2015 Donatella M. Viola

The right of Donatella M. Viola to be identified as the author of the editorial material, and of the authors for their individual chapters, has been asserted in accordance with sections 77 and 78 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988.

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reprinted or reproduced or utilised in any form or by any electronic, mechanical, or other means, now known or hereafter invented, including photocopying and recording, or in any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publishers.

Trademark notice: Product or corporate names may be trademarks or registered trademarks, and are used only for identification and explanation without intent to infringe.

British Library Cataloguing in Publication Data

A catalogue record for this book is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloging in Publication Data
[CIP data]

ISBN: 978-0-415-59203-1 (hbk)

ISBN: 978-1-315-71531-5 (ebk)

Typeset in Bembo Std
by Swales & Willis Ltd, Exeter, Devon, UK

Taylor and Francis
Not for distribution

CONTENTS

| | |
|---------------------------|---------------|
| Dedication | ix |
| List of Figures | x |
| List of Tables | xii |
| Contributors | xviii |
| Foreword | xxvi |
| J.H.H. Weiler | |
| Preface | xxx |
| Donatella M. Viola | |
| Prologue | xxxiii |
| Donatella M. Viola | |
| Acknowledgements | xxxvi |

PART I

| | |
|--|----------|
| General framework | 1 |
| 1 The genesis of the European Parliament: from appointed Consultative Assembly to directly elected legislative body Donatella M. Viola | 3 |
| 2 European Parliament's internal composition and organization Donatella M. Viola | 17 |
| 3 European Parliament elections theories Donatella M. Viola | 39 |

PART II

Country case reviews – the ‘Old’ Member States 49

The founding members 49

4 France 51

Julien Navarro

5 Germany 76

Siegfried Schieder and José M. Magone

6 Italy 109

Donatella M. Viola

7 Belgium 147

Nathalie Brack and Jean-Benoit Pilet

8 The Netherlands 167

Hans Vollaard, Gerrit Voerman, and Nelleke van de Walle

9 Luxembourg 189

Patrick Dumont, Raphaël Kies, and Philippe Poirier

The first enlargement countries 211

10 The United Kingdom 213

Julie Smith

11 Ireland 243

Richard Dunphy

12 Denmark 267

Carina Bischoff and Marlene Wind

The second and third enlargement countries 289

13 Greece 291

Maria M. Mendrinou

14 Spain 321

José M. Magone

15 Portugal 351

José M. Magone

| | |
|--|------------|
| The fourth enlargement countries | 375 |
| 16 Austria Sylvia Kritzingner and Karin Liebhart | 377 |
| 17 Finland Tapio Raunio | 396 |
| 18 Sweden Carina Bischoff and Marlene Wind | 414 |
| The 'New' Member States | 431 |
| The fifth enlargement countries | |
| Southern Mediterranean countries | |
| 19 Malta Roderick Pace | 433 |
| 20 Cyprus Kalliope Agapiou-Josephides | 448 |
| Central and Eastern European countries | 469 |
| 21 Slovenia Danica Fink-Hafner and Tomaž Deželan | 471 |
| 22 Estonia Piret Ehin | 491 |
| 23 Latvia Jānis Ikstens | 507 |
| 24 Lithuania Irmina Matonytė | 527 |
| 25 Czech Republic Michal Klíma | 549 |
| 26 Slovakia Marek Rybář | 568 |
| 27 Hungary Attila Ágh and Sándor Kurtán | 589 |

Contents

| | | |
|----|--|-----|
| 28 | Poland | 608 |
| | Jerzy Jaskiernia | |
| 29 | Bulgaria | 633 |
| | Dobrin Kanev and Katia Hristova-Văltcheva | |
| 30 | Romania | 653 |
| | Gabriela Borz and Alina Mihaela Stănciulescu | |
| | Comparative analysis of European elections – final remarks | 674 |
| | Donatella M. Viola | |
| | Epilogue: old and new trends in the 2014 European election | 700 |
| | Donatella M. Viola | |
| | Appendix | 736 |
| | Index | 760 |

Taylor and Francis
Not for distribution

To my dearest mother Natalina Scambia
In loving memory of my father Francesco Viola
(15 October 1922–31 March 2010)

Never to forget the heroism and courage of our fathers who fought for peace, freedom and democracy, values too often taken for granted and undermined by our generation. . . .

‘Thy self thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.’ (Shakespeare, Sonnet I)

‘. . . E tu onore di pianti, Ettore, avrai, ovefia santo e lagrimato il sangue per la patria versato, e finché il Sole risplenderà su le sciagure umanee’
‘I Sepolcri’, Ugo Foscolo

FIGURES

| | | |
|------|--|-----|
| 2.1a | EP Composition by nationality: July 2009 | 24 |
| 2.1b | EP Composition by nationality: July 2013 | 26 |
| 2.2a | EP Composition by political group: July 2009 | 29 |
| 2.2b | EP Composition by political groups: July 2013 | 30 |
| 4.1 | Map of France | 51 |
| 4.2 | French attitude to the European Union | 56 |
| 4.3 | Map of EP electoral constituencies in France | 57 |
| 5.1 | Map of Germany | 76 |
| 5.2 | German attitude to the European Union: 1999–2009 | 84 |
| 5.3 | National and EP election campaign expenditure in Germany: 1984–2009 | 103 |
| 6.1 | Map of Italy | 109 |
| 6.2 | Map of EP electoral constituencies in Italy | 120 |
| 7.1 | Map of Belgium | 147 |
| 7.2 | Map of EP electoral constituencies in Belgium | 154 |
| 8.1 | Map of The Netherlands | 167 |
| 9.1 | Map of Luxembourg | 189 |
| 10.1 | Map of the United Kingdom | 213 |
| 10.2 | Map of EP electoral constituencies in the United Kingdom | 219 |
| 11.1 | Map of Ireland | 243 |
| 11.2 | Map of EP electoral constituencies in Ireland | 251 |
| 11.3 | National and EP election campaign expenditure in Ireland | 264 |
| 12.1 | Map of Denmark | 267 |
| 12.2 | Eurosceptic party performance at EP and national elections in Denmark: 1979–2009 | 273 |
| 12.3 | Danish attitude to the European Union: 1974–2009 | 276 |
| 13.1 | Map of Greece | 291 |
| 14.1 | Map of Spain | 321 |
| 15.1 | Map of Portugal | 351 |
| 16.1 | Map of Austria | 377 |
| 16.2 | Austrian attitude to the European Union | 383 |
| 16.3 | Perceived benefit of EU membership in Austria | 383 |

Figures

| | | |
|------|---|-----|
| 16.4 | Public funding at national and EP elections in Austria: 2002–2009 | 393 |
| 17.1 | Map of Finland | 396 |
| 18.1 | Map of Sweden | 414 |
| 18.2 | Support for hard Eurosceptic parties at EP and national elections in Sweden | 419 |
| 18.3 | Swedish attitude to the European Union | 421 |
| 19.1 | Map of Malta | 433 |
| 20.1 | Map of Cyprus | 448 |
| 20.2 | Cypriot attitude to the European Union | 454 |
| 20.3 | Perceived benefits of EU membership in Cyprus | 455 |
| 21.1 | Map of Slovenia | 471 |
| 22.1 | Map of Estonia | 491 |
| 23.1 | Map of Latvia | 507 |
| 23.2 | Latvian attitude to the European Union | 513 |
| 24.1 | Map of Lithuania | 527 |
| 25.1 | Map of Czech Republic | 549 |
| 26.1 | Map of Slovakia | 568 |
| 27.1 | Map of Hungary | 589 |
| 28.1 | Map of Poland | 608 |
| 28.2 | Map of EP electoral constituencies in Poland | 616 |
| 29.1 | Map of Bulgaria | 633 |
| 30.1 | Map of Romania | 653 |
| 32.1 | Map of the European Union: May 2014 | 701 |
| 32.2 | Map of the European Union with EP electoral constituencies: May 2014 | 702 |
| 32.3 | EP composition by nationality: May 2014 | 710 |
| 32.4 | EP composition by political group: July 2014 | 711 |

TABLES

| | | |
|------|---|-----|
| 2.1 | EP composition: 1958–2013 | 25 |
| 2.2 | Women in the European Parliament: 1979–2009 | 26 |
| 2.3a | EP composition by political group and nationality: July 2009 | 31 |
| 2.3b | EP composition by political group and nationality: December 2011 | 32 |
| 2.3c | EP composition by political group and nationality: July 2013 | 32 |
| 2.4 | EP committees: seventh legislature | 35 |
| 2.5 | EP delegations: seventh legislature | 36 |
| 4.1 | France profile | 52 |
| 4.2 | List of political parties in France | 54 |
| 4.3 | National election results in France: 1978–2007 | 59 |
| 4.4 | EP election results in France: 1979–1999 | 60 |
| 4.5 | EP election abstention in France: 1979–1999 | 61 |
| 4.6 | EP election results and abstention in France: 2004–2009 | 66 |
| 4.7 | EP election results by constituency in France: 2009 | 68 |
| 4.8 | EP and national elections in France: 1979–2009 | 70 |
| 4.9 | List of French MEPs: seventh legislature | 71 |
| 5.1 | Germany profile | 76 |
| 5.2 | List of political parties in Germany | 84 |
| 5.3 | National election results in Germany: 1976–2009 | 87 |
| 5.4 | EP election results in Germany: 1979–2004 | 88 |
| 5.5 | Euromanifestos of non-parliamentary parties | 93 |
| 5.6 | EP election results in Germany: 2009 | 97 |
| 5.7 | The German MEPs' affiliation to the European parliamentary groups | 98 |
| 5.8 | List of German MEPs: seventh legislature | 99 |
| 6.1 | Italy profile | 110 |
| 6.2 | List of political parties in Italy | 115 |
| 6.3 | National election results in Italy: 1979–1992 | 123 |
| 6.4 | EP election results in Italy: 1979–1989 | 123 |
| 6.5 | National election results in Italy: 1994–2008 | 124 |
| 6.6 | EP election results in Italy: 1994–2004 | 126 |
| 6.7 | Turnout at national and EP elections in Italy: 1979–2009 | 128 |

Tables

| | | |
|-------|--|-----|
| 6.8 | The 2009 party campaign issues in Italy | 130 |
| 6.9 | EP election results in Italy: 2009 | 133 |
| 6.10 | Seat distribution of the Italian delegation in the EP | 135 |
| 6.11 | Age and gender of Italian MEPs | 135 |
| 6.12 | Political background of Italian MEPs | 135 |
| 6.13 | Tenure of the Italian delegation in the EP | 136 |
| 6.14 | Italian committee Chairs and Vice-Chairs: 2009 | 136 |
| 6.15 | List of Italian MEPs: seventh legislature | 137 |
| 6.16 | Parties eligible for electoral reimbursement in Italy | 139 |
| 6.17 | EP election campaign expenditure in Italy | 140 |
| 6.18 | Public funding for political parties in Italy: 2009–2013 | 140 |
| 7.1 | Belgium profile | 148 |
| 7.2 | List of political parties in Belgium | 151 |
| 7.3 | Belgian attitude to the European Union | 153 |
| 7.4 | Perceived benefit of EU membership in Belgium | 153 |
| 7.5 | Turnouts at national and EP elections in Belgium: 1987–2010 | 155 |
| 7.6 | National elections results of Flemish parties in Belgium: 1978–2010 | 155 |
| 7.7 | EP election results of Flemish parties in Belgium: 1979–2009 | 156 |
| 7.8 | National election results of Francophone parties in Belgium: 1978–2010 | 156 |
| 7.9 | EP election results of Francophone parties in Belgium: 1979–2009 | 156 |
| 7.10 | Distribution of Belgian MEPs in European Parliament: 2009–2014 | 159 |
| 7.11 | List of Belgian MEPs: seventh legislature | 160 |
| 7.12 | EP election results in the Dutch-speaking College in Belgium: 2009 | 162 |
| 7.13 | EP election results in the French-speaking College in Belgium: 2009 | 162 |
| 7.14 | EP election results in the German-speaking College in Belgium: 2009 | 163 |
| 8.1 | The Netherlands profile | 168 |
| 8.2 | List of political parties in The Netherlands | 171 |
| 8.3 | National election results in The Netherlands: 1977–2012 | 176 |
| 8.4 | EP election results in The Netherlands: 1979–2009 | 177 |
| 8.5 | EP detailed election results in The Netherlands: 2009 | 182 |
| 8.6 | List of Dutch MEPs in The Netherlands: seventh legislature | 183 |
| 9.1 | Luxembourg profile | 190 |
| 9.2 | List of political parties in Luxembourg | 193 |
| 9.3 | National elections in Luxembourg: 1979–2009 | 197 |
| 9.4 | Sources of information at the 2004 and 2009 EP elections in Luxembourg | 202 |
| 9.5 | The 2009 electoral campaigning tools in Luxembourg | 203 |
| 9.6 | EP election results in Luxembourg 1979–2009 | 204 |
| 9.7 | Differences between National and EP elections in Luxembourg: 1979–2009 | 205 |
| 9.8 | Rate of Abstention at EP and National Elections in Luxembourg: 1979–2009 | 205 |
| 9.9 | List of Luxembourg MEPs: seventh legislature | 206 |
| 10.1 | United Kingdom profile | 214 |
| 10.2 | List of political parties in the UK contesting the 2009 EP elections | 217 |
| 10.3 | National election results in the UK: 1979–2010 | 221 |
| 10.4a | EP election results in Great Britain: 1979–1994 | 222 |
| 10.4b | EP election results in Northern Ireland: 1979–1994 | 223 |
| 10.4c | EP election results in Great Britain: 1979–1994 | 223 |
| 10.4d | EP election results in Northern Ireland: 1999–2009 | 223 |
| 10.5 | Allocation of EP seats to regions in the UK | 228 |

Tables

| | | |
|-------|---|-----|
| 10.6 | British MEPs according to electoral constituencies | 228 |
| 10.7 | EP detailed election results in the UK: 2009 | 230 |
| 10.8 | List of British MEPs: seventh legislature | 231 |
| 11.1 | Ireland profile | 244 |
| 11.2 | List of Irish political parties and their European alignments | 247 |
| 11.3 | European referendum results: 1972–2009 | 250 |
| 11.4 | EP elections in Ireland: 1979–2009 | 253 |
| 11.5 | National election results in Ireland: 1977–2011 | 256 |
| 11.6 | EP detailed election results in Ireland: 2009 | 262 |
| 11.7 | List of Irish MEPs: seventh legislature | 263 |
| 12.1 | Denmark profile | 268 |
| 12.2 | List of political parties in Denmark | 270 |
| 12.3 | Referenda on Europe in Denmark | 277 |
| 12.4 | EP election results and turnout in Denmark: 1979–2004 | 278 |
| 12.5 | National election results and turnouts in Denmark: 1979–2011 | 279 |
| 12.6 | EP election results in Denmark: 2009 | 282 |
| 12.7 | List of Danish MEPs: seventh legislature | 284 |
| 13.1 | Greece profile | 292 |
| 13.2 | List of political parties in Greece: 1974–2012 | 296 |
| 13.3 | EP election results in Greece: 1981–2004 | 303 |
| 13.4 | National election results in Greece: 1974–2012 | 305 |
| 13.5 | Turnouts at national and EP elections in Greece: 1974–2012 | 307 |
| 13.6 | List of Greek political parties at the 2009 EP elections | 308 |
| 13.7 | EP election results: 2009 | 310 |
| 13.8 | List of Greek MEPs: seventh legislature | 311 |
| 13.9 | Re-election of Greek MEPs: 1981–2009 | 315 |
| 13.10 | Greek MEPs by Gender: 1981–2009 | 315 |
| 13.11 | Models examining the difference between EP and national Election results in Greece | 318 |
| 14.1 | Spain profile | 322 |
| 14.2 | List of political parties in Spain | 326 |
| 14.3 | Spanish attitude to the European Union | 327 |
| 14.4 | Perceived benefit of EU membership in Spain | 328 |
| 14.5 | Turnouts at EP elections in Spain: 1987–2009 | 329 |
| 14.6 | National election results in Spain: 1977–2011 | 333 |
| 14.7 | EP election results in Spain: 1987–2004 | 333 |
| 14.8 | EP election results in Spain: 2009 | 338 |
| 14.9 | List of Spanish MEPs: seventh legislature | 339 |
| 14.10 | National and EP election campaign expenditure in Spain | 347 |
| 15.1 | Portugal profile | 352 |
| 15.2 | List of political parties in Portugal | 355 |
| 15.3 | Portuguese attitude to the European Union | 356 |
| 15.4 | Perceived benefit of EU membership in Portugal | 356 |
| 15.5 | Turnout and abstention at EP elections in Portugal 1987–2009 | 357 |
| 15.6 | National election results in Portugal: 1985–2011 | 360 |
| 15.7 | EP election results in Portugal 1987–2004 | 361 |
| 15.8 | EP election results in Portugal: 2009 | 367 |
| 15.9 | List of Portuguese MEPS: seventh legislature | 368 |

Tables

| | | |
|-------|---|-----|
| 15.10 | National and EP election campaign expenditure in Portugal | 371 |
| 16.1 | Austria profile | 378 |
| 16.2 | List of political parties in Austria | 381 |
| 16.3 | EP and national election results in Austria: 1994–2009 | 384 |
| 16.4 | Turnouts at EP and national elections in Austria: 1994–2009 | 385 |
| 16.5 | EP election results in Austria: 2009 | 388 |
| 16.6 | Austrian MEPs' affiliation to EP political groups | 390 |
| 16.7 | List of Austrian MEPs: seventh legislature | 391 |
| 17.1 | Finland profile | 397 |
| 17.2 | List of political parties in Finland | 400 |
| 17.3 | National election results and turnouts in Finland: 1995–2011 | 403 |
| 17.4 | EP election results and turnouts in Finland: 1996–2009 | 403 |
| 17.5 | EP election results in Finland: 2009 | 408 |
| 17.6 | List of Finnish MEPs: seventh legislature | 410 |
| 18.1 | Sweden profile | 415 |
| 18.2 | List of political parties in Sweden | 418 |
| 18.3 | National election results and turnouts in Sweden: 1994–2010 | 422 |
| 18.4 | EP election results and turnouts in Sweden: 1995–2009 | 422 |
| 18.5 | List of Swedish MEPs: seventh legislature | 426 |
| 19.1 | Malta profile | 434 |
| 19.2 | List of political parties in Malta | 436 |
| 19.3 | National and EP election results in Malta: 2003–2009 | 438 |
| 19.4 | Turnouts at national and EP elections in Malta: 2003–2009 | 438 |
| 19.5 | EP election results in Malta: 2009 | 443 |
| 19.6 | List of Maltese MEPs: seventh legislature | 445 |
| 20.1 | Cyprus profile | 449 |
| 20.2a | List of Greek Cypriot political parties in Cyprus | 451 |
| 20.2b | List of Turkish Cypriot political parties in Cyprus | 452 |
| 20.3 | National and EP election results in Cyprus: 2001–2009 | 457 |
| 20.4 | National election results in Cyprus: 2001, 2006 and 2011 | 459 |
| 20.5 | EP election results in Cyprus: 2009 | 463 |
| 20.6 | List of Cypriot MEPs: seventh legislature | 464 |
| 21.1 | Slovenia profile | 472 |
| 21.2 | List of Slovenian political parties | 476 |
| 21.3 | List of Slovenian political parties and their European affiliations | 477 |
| 21.4 | National election results in Slovenia: 1990–2011 | 479 |
| 21.5 | Turnouts at national and EP elections in Slovenia: 1990–2009 | 481 |
| 21.6 | EP election results in Slovenia: 2009 | 483 |
| 21.7 | List of Slovenian MEPs: sixth and seventh legislatures | 485 |
| 22.1 | Estonia Profile | 492 |
| 22.2 | List of Political Parties in Estonia | 495 |
| 22.3 | National election results in Estonia: 2007–2011 | 498 |
| 22.4 | EP election results in Estonia: 2004 | 498 |
| 22.5 | EP election results and turnouts in Estonia: 2009 | 502 |
| 22.6 | List of Estonian MEPs: seventh legislature | 503 |
| 23.1 | Latvia profile | 508 |
| 23.2 | Number of slates and parties at national elections in Latvia: 2002–2010 | 510 |
| 23.3 | List of political parties in Latvia | 511 |

Tables

| | | |
|-------|--|-----|
| 23.4 | National Parliament election results in Latvia: 2002–2006 | 516 |
| 23.5 | Turnouts in national elections in Latvia: 2002–2006 | 516 |
| 23.6 | Turnouts at EP elections in Latvia: 2009 | 521 |
| 23.7 | EP election results in Latvia: 2009 | 521 |
| 23.8 | EP electoral results of major parties in Latvia: 2004–2009 | 521 |
| 23.9 | List of Latvian MEPs: seventh legislature | 523 |
| 24.1 | Lithuania profile | 528 |
| 24.2 | List of political parties in Lithuania | 530 |
| 24.3 | National election results: 2000 | 533 |
| 24.4 | EP election results in Lithuania: 2004 | 533 |
| 24.5 | EP electoral lists in Lithuania: 2009 | 535 |
| 24.6 | The 2009 party campaign issues in Lithuania | 539 |
| 24.7a | National and EP election results: 2008–2009 | 541 |
| 24.7b | EP election results in Lithuania: 2009 | 542 |
| 24.8 | List of Lithuanian MEPs: seventh legislature | 543 |
| 25.1 | Czech Republic profile | 550 |
| 25.2 | List of political parties in the Czech Republic | 552 |
| 25.3 | National election results in the Czech Republic: 2002–2010 | 557 |
| 25.4 | EP election results in the Czech Republic: 2004–2009 | 562 |
| 25.5 | Czech elected MEPs in 2009: number of preferences | 563 |
| 25.6 | List of Czech MEPs: seventh legislature | 564 |
| 26.1 | Slovakia profile | 569 |
| 26.2 | List of political parties in Slovakia | 572 |
| 26.3 | National election results in Slovakia: 2002 and 2006 | 579 |
| 26.4 | EP election results in Slovakia: 2004 and 2009 | 579 |
| 26.5 | EP election results in Slovakia: 2009 | 585 |
| 26.6 | List of Slovak MEPs: seventh legislature | 586 |
| 27.1 | Hungary profile | 590 |
| 27.2 | List of political parties in Hungary | 592 |
| 27.3 | National election results in Hungary: 2002–2010 | 597 |
| 27.4 | EP Election Results in Hungary: 2004–2009 | 600 |
| 27.5 | List of Hungarian MEPs: seventh legislature | 601 |
| 28.1 | Poland profile | 609 |
| 28.2a | List of political parties in Poland | 612 |
| 28.2b | Parliamentary political parties in Poland | 613 |
| 28.3 | National election results in Poland: 2001–2007 | 617 |
| 28.4 | Turnout at national and EP elections in Poland | 618 |
| 28.5 | EP election results in Poland: 2004 | 618 |
| 28.6 | EP election results in Poland: 2009 | 623 |
| 28.7 | Polish MEPs' affiliation to EP political group: 2004–2009 | 625 |
| 28.8 | List of Polish MEPs: seventh legislature | 626 |
| 29.1 | Bulgaria profile | 634 |
| 29.2 | List of political parties in Bulgaria | 637 |
| 29.3 | National elections in Bulgaria: 2005 | 642 |
| 29.4 | EP elections in Bulgaria: 2007 | 642 |
| 29.5 | Importance for Bulgarians of the 2009 EP elections | 646 |
| 29.6 | Electoral Turnouts in Bulgaria: 2005–2013 | 647 |
| 29.7 | EP elections in Bulgaria: 2009 | 647 |

Tables

| | | |
|-------|--|-----|
| 29.8 | List of Bulgarian MEPs: seventh legislature | 648 |
| 30.1 | Romania profile | 654 |
| 30.2a | List of political parties in Romania | 656 |
| 30.2b | List of Romanian political parties and their European alignments | 658 |
| 30.3 | Issue Saliience (%) before and after the 2009 EP Elections: Romania and the EU-27 | 659 |
| 30.4 | Turnouts at national and EP elections in Romania: 2004–2009 | 661 |
| 30.5 | National election results in Romania: 1990–2012 | 661 |
| 30.6 | EP election results in Romania: 2007 and 2009 | 665 |
| 30.7 | List of Romanian MEPs: seventh legislature | 667 |
| 31.1 | EU Member State key features | 676 |
| 31.2 | European Parliament campaign issues: 1979–2009 | 678 |
| 31.3a | Second-Order Election theories: ‘Old’ EU Member States | 681 |
| 31.3b | Second-Order Election theories: ‘New’ EU Member States | 682 |
| 31.3c | Europe Saliience theories: ‘Old’ EU Member States | 684 |
| 31.3d | Europe Saliience theories: ‘New’ EU Member States | 685 |
| 31.4a | Eurosceptic parties in the original six countries: 1979–2009 | 687 |
| 31.4b | Eurosceptic parties in ‘Old’ EU enlargement countries: 1979–2009 | 690 |
| 31.4c | Eurosceptic Parties in ‘New’ EU Enlargement Countries: 1979–2009 | 691 |
| 31.5a | Turnouts at EP elections: 1979–2009 | 693 |
| 31.5b | National election turnouts in ‘Old’ EU Member States: 1973–2009 | 694 |
| 31.5c | National election turnouts in ‘New’ EU Member States: 2001–2010 | 695 |
| 32.1a | Turnouts at EP elections in aggregate countries: 2009/2013–2014 | 705 |
| 32.1b | Turnout at EP elections in EU Member States: 2009/2013–2014 | 708 |
| 32.2a | EP composition by political group: 2009–2011–2013–2014 | 712 |
| 32.2b | EP composition by nationality and political group: July 2014 | 719 |
| 32.3a | Gender MEP ratio in aggregate countries: 2014 | 721 |
| 32.3b | European Parliament composition by nationality and gender: July 2014 | 722 |
| 32.3c | EP composition by political group, nationality and gender: July 2014 | 723 |
| 32.3d | Political group breakdown by gender in aggregate countries: July 2014 | 725 |
| 32.3e | Female representation by political group in aggregate countries: July 2014 | 727 |
| 32.4a | EP election winners in ‘Old’ EU Member States: May 2014 | 728 |
| 32.4b | EP election winners in ‘New’ EU Member States: May 2014 | 729 |
| 33.1 | EP electoral systems in EU Member States | 736 |
| 33.2a | European Parliament composition: 1979 | 737 |
| 33.2b | European Parliament composition: 1984 | 738 |
| 33.2c | European Parliament composition: 1989 | 739 |
| 33.2d | European Parliament composition: 1994 | 741 |
| 33.2e | European Parliament composition: 1999 | 743 |
| 33.2f | European Parliament composition: 2004 | 745 |
| 33.2g | European Parliament composition: 2009 | 748 |
| 33.2h | European Parliament composition: 2014 | 751 |
| 33.3 | Political group Chair and Co-Chair: July 2014 | 755 |
| 33.4 | List of Eurosceptic parties in EU Member States: 1979–2009 | 756 |
| 33.5a | List of political parties in Croatia | 758 |
| 33.5b | List of Croatian MEPs: seventh legislature | 759 |

CONTRIBUTORS

Kalliope Agapiou-Josephides PhD in Political Science from Paris I Panthéon-Sorbonne University, France, is Jean Monnet Chair in European Political Integration and Assistant Professor at the Department of Social and Political Sciences, University of Cyprus. She is Deputy President of the European Inter-University Centre for Human Rights and Democratization and Board Member of the European Gender Equality Institute. Her most recent publications include: 'Changing Patterns of Euroscepticism in Cyprus: European Discourse in a Divided Polity and Society', South European Society and Politics, 2011; 'Women's Suffrage in Cyprus', in Blanca Rodriguez-Ruiz and Ruth Rubio-Marin, (eds.) The Struggle for Female Suffrage in Europe, Brill (2012); with Jean Rossetto (eds.) La singularité de Chypre dans l'Union européenne: La diversité des droits et des status, Mare & Martin (2012); with Florence Benoit-Rohmer et al., Women's Rights During Democratic Transitions, European Parliament (2012).

Attila Ágh PhD in Political Science from the Centre Européen Universitaire de Nancy, France, is Professor of Political Sciences and Head of the PhD School at the Budapest Corvinus University. He has been Visiting Professor in several universities in Moscow, Dar es Salaam, New Delhi, Los Angeles, Vienna, Aarhus, Mexico City, Pretoria and Sidney. His research interests focus on comparative politics, especially East-Central European Democratization and Europeanization. He has published about 100 articles in international journals and 20 books including Eastern Enlargement and the Future of the EU27: EU Foreign Policy in a Global World (2013) and Progress Report on the New Member States: Twenty Years of Social and Political Developments, (2013).

Carina Bischoff PhD in Political Science from the European University Institute, Florence, Italy, is Assistant Professor at the Institute of Society and Globalization at Roskilde University. Her research interests focus on the European Union as well as national-level comparative politics, in particular on parties and party systems, electoral systems and voter behaviour, parliaments, and governments. Her most recent publications include: Changing Rule of Delegation – a Contest for Power in Comitology, Adrienne Heritier, Catherine Moury (eds) Oxford University Press, 2013; Party Patronage and Party Government in European Democracies, Petr Kopecky, Peter Mair and Maria Spirova (eds) Oxford University Press, 2012; articles on voter volatility in Public Choice (2012) and on electoral thresholds in Electoral Studies (2009).

Gabriela Borz PhD in Political Science from CEU, Budapest, Hungary is a Lecturer at the University of Strathclyde, Glasgow, United Kingdom. Her research interests include representation, comparative parties and party systems, party organization, parliamentary activity, and constitutionalism. Her recent articles, including 'Models of Party Democracy: Patterns of Party Regulation in Post-war European Constitutions'; 'Aggregation and Representation in European Parliament Party Groups'; 'Institutional Stimuli and Individual Response as Explanations of Turnout: The 2009 EP Election', are published in European Political Science Review, West European Politics, Journal of Elections and Public Opinion and Parties.

Nathalie Brack PhD in Political Science from the Université libre de Bruxelles, Belgium, is currently Post-doctoral Fellow at the University of Oxford (Wiener Anspach Foundation Grant) and Université libre de Bruxelles (CEVIPOL). Her research interests include Euroscepticism, the European Parliament, political representation, parliamentary and legislative studies, as well as political opposition. She recently published 'Euroscepticism at the Supranational Level: the Case of the "Untidy Right" in the European Parliament' (2012), in the Journal of Common Market Studies and co-authored 'The Challenges of Territorial Representation at the Supranational Level: The Case of French MEPs' (2013), in French Politics. She also edited a special issue of the Journal of European Integration on the diverging views of Europe within EU institutions and will soon publish the book entitled How the EU really works, with Olivier Costa, Ashgate (2013).

Tomaž Deželan PhD in Political Science from the University of Ljubljana, Slovenia, is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the Faculty of Social Sciences at the University of Ljubljana. His research interests include political communication, citizenship concepts, parliamentary cohesion, electoral studies, sociology of the profession, youth, gender and civil society. He has authored and co-authored more than 20 peer-reviewed articles in international journals and scientific volumes and several scientific monographs. His research has been published in the following journals Citizenship Studies, International Journal of Manpower, Communication, Politics & Culture, Lex Localis, Balkanistica, Teorija in Praksa, and Politiška misao.

Patrick Dumont PhD in Political Science from the University of Geneva, Switzerland, is a Researcher at the University of Luxembourg. He is co-founder of the Selection and Deselection of Political Elites international network and series editor of Routledge Research in Social and Political Elites. He is member of the editorial board of the Revue Internationale de Politique Comparée. He has published on his main topics of interest such as coalition theory, political elites, parties and party systems, and Europeanization processes in international journals such as the European Journal of Political Research, European Union Politics, Journal of European Public Policy, Public Choice and won the Vincent Wright award for best article in 2007 in West European Politics. His most recent publications include two co-edited books: European Integration and Consensus Politics in the Low Countries and The Selection of Ministers around the World: A Comparative Study, Routledge (2014).

Richard Dunphy PhD in Political Science from the European University Institute, Florence, Italy, is Senior Lecturer in Politics at the University of Dundee. His specialist areas of research are Irish and European politics, the politics of gender and sexuality, and the politics of the radical left. In recent years, he has published many papers on the problems of the radical left in Europe, especially those problems associated with coalition government formation and participation. His current book, The European Left Party: A Case Study in Transnational Party-building, co-written with Luke March, is a study of the transnational European Left Party, published by Manchester University Press in 2014.

Piret Ehin PhD in Political Science from the University of Arizona, United States, is Senior Researcher at the Institute of Government and Politics and Director of the Centre for EU-Russia Studies at the University of Tartu, Estonia. She worked as Deputy Director of EuroCollege at the University of Tartu from 2002 to 2004, was Chair of the Executive Board of the Open Estonia Foundation in 2008–2009, and has been affiliated with the Estonian Foreign Policy Institute since 2005. Her main research interests include legitimacy, political support, and electoral behaviour both at the national and European level, and international relations (IR) in the Baltic Sea region. Her work has been published in the Journal of Common Market Studies, Cooperation and Conflict, and the Journal of Baltic Studies, among others. She is the Estonian country collaborator for cross-national survey projects such as the European Election Studies (EES) and the Comparative Study of Electoral Systems (CSES).

Danica Fink-Hafner PhD in Political Science from the University of Ljubljana, Slovenia, is Professor of Political Parties, Interest Groups and Policy Analysis at the University of Ljubljana and Head of the Centre for Political Science Research at the Faculty of Social Sciences. Her research interests include policy analysis, interest groups and lobbying, parties and party systems, democracy, gender, and Europeanization and political science. Her articles have appeared in journals such as Public Administration, the Journal of Communist Studies, the Journal of European Public Policy, Canadian Slavonic Studies, the Journal of Southern Europe and the Balkans, the Czech Sociological Review, the International Journal of Manpower, and the European Journal of Political Research-Political Data Yearbook.

Katia Hristova-Valtcheva PhD in Political Science from Sofia University, Bulgaria, is Senior Assistant Professor in Political Science at New Bulgarian University, Jean Monnet Lecturer at Sofia University, St. Kl. Ohridski, and Acting Secretary General of the Bulgarian European Community Studies Association. Her research interests focus on Europeanization, civil society and civic action, and post-Communist transformations. Her most recent publications include: 'Bulgarien', in Werner Reutter, ed., Verbände und Interessengruppen in den Ländern der Europäischen Union, Springer Fachmedien Wiesbaden (2012); 'Construire la citoyenneté européenne par l'initiative législative des citoyens: limites de l'approche', in Gilles Rouet, ed., Citoyennetés et Nationalités en Europe, l'Harmattan (2011); and 'The "Europeanisation" of the 2009 EP Elections in Bulgaria', in Anna Krasteva and Antonii Todorov, eds., Elections 2009 in Bulgaria: European, National and Local, New Bulgarian University (2010).

Jānis Ikstens PhD in Political Science from the University of Latvia, Rīga, Latvia, is Professor of Comparative Politics at the University of Latvia. He has co-edited a volume on party finance in post-Communist countries, 2008 and authored a number of articles on parties and elections in Latvia. He has written a chapter on Latvian Social Democrats in the book edited by Jean-Michel de Waele, Fabien Escalona and Mathieu Vieira, The Palgrave Handbook of Social Democracy in the European Union, Palgrave Macmillan (2013).

Jerzy Jaskiernia PhD in Legal Science from Jagiellonian University, Poland, is Professor of Constitutional Law and Comparative Governments at the Jan Kochanowski University of Kielce, Director of the Institute of Economy and Administration and Chair of the Department of Administration and Legal Sciences. His main books include: Position of the States in U.S. federal system, Warszawa (1979); The United States and Contemporary Processes and Conceptions of European Integration, Warszawa (1992); Idea of Equality in U.S. Election Law, Warszawa (1992); Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, Warszawa (2000); Council of Europe and Democratic Transition in the States of Central and Eastern Europe 1989–2009, Toruń (2010); Transformation of the Judicial Systems, vols I and II, Toruń (2011); Effectiveness of the European System of Protection of Human Rights, vols I–III, Toruń (2012).

Dobrin Kanev PhD in Philosophy from the Bulgarian Academy of Science, Sofia, is Associate Professor in Political Science and European Studies at the New Bulgarian University in Sofia, Bulgaria. Since 2001 he has held a Jean Monnet permanent course on the European political system. He is a Permanent Senior Fellow of the Centre for European Integration Studies, Bonn University, Germany. He is a member of the Editorial Board of SEER, Journal for Labour and Social Affairs in Eastern Europe, Brussels. He was Secretary (Political Advisor) to the president of the Republic of Bulgaria from 2002 to 2012, responsible for research and analysis. He was also the Founder and first Director of the Research Service of the Bulgarian Parliament between 1995 and 1997. Professor Kanev has published intensively on democratic transition, institution-building, and elections in contemporary Bulgaria and on political parties in European countries and in Bulgaria.

Raphaël Kies PhD in Political Science from the European University Institute, Florence, Italy, is Researcher in Political Science at the University of Luxembourg. He is co-responsible for the national and European electoral studies programme and for the introduction and evaluation of innovative methods of political participation at the national and European level. He has published several articles and books on e-democracy, local democracy, and deliberative democracy. He has published a book Promises and Limits of Web-Deliberation, Palgrave (2010) and an edited book, with Patrizia Nanz, European Citizens Deliberation: a Promising Path for EU Governance? Ashgate (2014).

Michal Klíma PhD in Political Science from Taras Shevchenko University, Kiev, Ukraine, is the Rector of Metropolitan University Prague and Professor in Political Science. His areas of specialization and research interests gravitate around comparative government, European integration, party and electoral systems as well as clientelism and corruption. Michal Klíma is a frequent commentator on Czech television and has authored many works on issues related to political life in the country. His publications record includes monographs such as Elections and Political Parties in Modern Democracies; Quality of Democracy in the Czech Republic and Electoral Engineering and scholarly articles such as ‘Conceptualising the Clientelistic Party: The Case Study of the Czech Republic’, in the Czech Journal of Political Science.

Sylvia Kritzinger PhD in Political Science from the University of Vienna, Austria, is Professor for Methods in the Social Sciences at the University of Vienna. Her main research interests focus on political behaviour, electoral research, democratic representation, and quantitative social science methods. Her most recent publications include: The Austrian Voter, with Eva Zeglovits, Michael S. Lewis-Beck and Richard Nadeau, Vienna University Press (2013); ‘The Structure of Issue Attitudes Revisited. A Dimensional Analysis of Austrian Voters and Party Elites’, with Martin Dolezal, Nikolaus Eder, and Eva Zeglovits, in Journal of Elections, Public Opinion and Parties (2013); ‘How Has Radical Right Support Transformed Established Political Conflicts? The Case of Austria’, with Julian Aichholzer, Markus Wagner, and Eva Zeglovits, in West European Politics (2014); ‘Voting at 16: Turnout and the Quality of Vote Choice’ with Markus Wagner and David Johann, in Electoral Studies (2012).

Sándor Kurtán PhD from Eötvös Roland University, Budapest, Hungary, is Assistant Professor, at the Institute of Political Science, Corvinus University of Budapest. His main research interests focus on the Hungarian Parliament and Hungarian political elites and intelligence services. His publications include, 'The Role of National Parliament in EU affairs. A Comparative View on Austria and Hungary', with Leile Hadj-Abdou, in Attila Ágh (ed.) Post-Accession in East Central Europe: The Emergence of the EU 25, Hungarian Centre for Democracy Studies (2004); and 'Hungary', with Gabriella Ilonszki, in the European Journal of Political Research (2004).

Karin Liebhart PhD in Political Science from the University of Vienna, Austria, is Senior Lecturer in Political Science at the University of Vienna and Visiting Professor at the Nationalism Studies Programme/CEU Budapest, as well as at the Institute of European Studies and International Relations, Comenius University Bratislava. Her main research interests focus on visual representations of politics, political cultures, memory politics, EU enlargement and European neighbourhood policy, and political, economic, social and cultural processes of transformation. Her main publications include: 'Discursive and Visual Representations of EU Presidencies: Austria, Slovenia, Czech Republic, Hungary and Poland in Comparison', in Olga Gyarfasova and Karin Liebhart eds., Cultural Patterns of Politics, LIT Berlin-Münster-Vienna (2013); and 'The CEE and SEE Expansion of Austrian Banks. A Showcase Analysis of Relating Media Coverage' in Attila Ágh et al. eds, European Futures: The Perspectives of the New Member States in the New Europe, Sage (2014).

José M. Magone Dphil in Political Science from the University of Vienna, Austria, is Professor in Regional and Global Governance at the Berlin School of Economics and Law. His main research interests are comparative European politics, southern European politics, European Union politics, and regional and global governance. He has published ten books, over 40 chapters in contributed books, and 14 articles. His latest publications include: The New World Architecture. The Role of the European Union in the Making of Global Governance, New Brunswick, Transaction (2006); Contemporary Spanish Politics, Routledge (2009); Contemporary European Politics. A Comparative Introduction, Routledge (2011); and The Politics of Contemporary Portugal. Evolving Democracy, Lynne Rienner (2014).

Irmína Matonytė PhD in Political Science from Vytautas Magnus University, Kaunas, Lithuania, is Professor of Political Science at the ISM University of Management and Economics, Vilnius, Lithuania. She is a former Chair of the Lithuanian Political Science Association and former member of the Executive Committee of the International Political Science Association (IPSA). Her research interests include transformations of post-Communist elites, Europeanization, coalition governance, civil society, women in politics, and political communication. She has authored or co-authored more than 40 peer-reviewed articles in national and international journals, and ten scientific monographs. Her recent publications include: 'The Elite's Games in the Field of Memory: Insights from Lithuania', in Georges Mink, Laure Neumayer eds., History, Memory and Politics in Central and Eastern Europe. Memory Games, Palgrave Macmillan (2013). Some of her academic projects have been funded by the EC FP6 framework, the European Science Foundation, and Norwegian, Austrian, and Swedish research agencies.

Maria M. Mendrinou PhD in Government from the University of Manchester, UK, is Associate Professor of European Political Economy and European Integration at the Department of International and European Studies of the University of Piraeus. She holds degrees from the University of Athens on Political Science and an MA in Politics from Brandeis University, USA. She has participated in international conferences in Europe and the USA and in numerous research projects. She has published extensively in Greek and English. Her English publications include the book Politics, Subsidies and Competition: The New Politics of State Intervention in the European Union, with Kostas A. Lavdas, Edward Elgar (1999), and articles in international journals such as the European Journal of Political Research and the Journal of European Public Policy, together with numerous contributions in edited volumes.

Julien Navarro PhD in Political Science from the Bordeaux Institute of Political Studies, France, is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the Lille Catholic University. His research interests within the field of comparative politics include political elites, parliamentary institutions and electoral studies. He is the author of several articles and of a book entitled Les députés européens et leur rôle. Sociologie interprétative des pratiques parlementaires, Editions de l'Université de Bruxelles (2009). His articles have appeared in French Politics, Revue Française de Science Politique, the Journal of Legislative Studies and Revue Internationale de Politique Comparée.

Roderick Pace PhD in Politics from the University of Reading, UK, is Director of the Institute for European Studies and Jean Monnet Chair holder at the University of Malta. He is a member of the editorial Board of the Journal of South European Society and Politics. His main research interests focus on Malta in the EU, Euro-Mediterranean relations, small states in world politics, and theories of European integration. Some of his most recent publications include: 'Malta', in Heiko Biehl, Bastian Giegerich, and Alexandra Jonas eds., Strategic Cultures in Europe: Security and Defence Policies Across the Continent, Springer (2013) and 'Malta: A Lilliputian's Struggle for Security and Peace' in Michael Baun, and Dan Marek eds., The New Member States and the European Union: Foreign Policy and Europeanization, Routledge (2013).

Jean-Benoît Pilet PhD in Political Science from the Université libre de Bruxelles, Belgium, is Professor of Political Science at the Université libre de Bruxelles and is currently Director of the CEVIPOL. His main research interests are electoral reforms, electoral systems, candidate selection, parliamentary careers, local politics, and Belgium and party politics. He is the author of several books and articles on local politics, elections, and Belgian politics and electoral reforms. He recently published 'Executive-Legislative Relations without a Government' in European Political Science, 2012, and co-edited a special issue of Representation, the Journal of Representative Democracy, entitled 'Political Representation in Belgium, France and Portugal'. He currently works on a research project on electoral system changes in Europe since 1945 and, with A. Renwick, will publish a book entitled Faces on the ballot: The Personalization of Electoral Systems in Europe, Oxford University Press (forthcoming).

Philippe Poirier PhD in Political Science from the University of Rennes I, France and University of Ottawa, Canada, is Associate Professor of Political Science, holder of the Chair in Legislative Studies of Chambre des Députés du Luxembourg, coordinator of the European governance research program at the University of Luxembourg, Visiting Professor at the University of Paris Sorbonne and Collège des Bernardins, and Director of Parliamentary Studies Collection, editions Larcier. He has published several articles and books on comparative politics, European Union politics and religion and politics in Europe. He has recently edited two books for the Collège des Bernardins Series, Bayard Editions, Gouvernance mondiale et éthique au XXIème siècle, January 2013 et Liberté(s), Démocratie(s) et Religion(s) (December 2013).

Tapio Raunio PhD in Political Science from the University of Tampere, Finland, is Professor of Political Science at the same university. His research interests include the role of national legislatures and parties in European integration, the European Parliament and Euro-parties, Nordic legislatures, and the Finnish political system. He has published articles in journals such as Comparative European Politics, the European Journal of Political Research, European Union Politics, the Journal of Common Market Studies, the Journal of European Public Policy, Party Politics, Scandinavian Political Studies, and West European Politics. Raunio is the co-editor of National Parliaments within the Enlarged European Union: From 'victims' of integration to competitive actors? with John O'Brennan, Routledge (2007) and Connecting with the Electorate? Parliamentary Communication in EU Affairs with Katrin Auel, Routledge (2014). Along with David Arter, he is currently leading a research project that examines the links between Nordic parliaments, MPs and their electorates.

Marek Rybář PhD Political Science from Comenius University Bratislava, Slovakia, is an Associate Professor of Political Science at the Faculty of Philosophy, Comenius University, Bratislava. His research focusses on political parties and party competition in Central and Eastern Europe, and on the influence of European integration on domestic politics of the EU Member States. He has published numerous chapters in edited volumes and studies in several journals, including the Journal of Communist Studies and Transition Politics, Communist and Post-Communist Studies, the Slovak Sociological Review and Electoral Studies. Currently he is working on a research project examining institutional performance in the new democracies of Central and Eastern Europe.

Siegfried Schieder PhD in Political Science from the University of Trier, Germany, is currently Professor in International Relations and Foreign Policy at the University of Trier, Germany and Visiting Professor at Fudan University, Shanghai. He has been Lecturer in International Relations at the University of Dresden, Visiting Lecturer in International Relations at the Free University of Berlin, and Assistant Professor in IR and German European Policy at the University of Heidelberg. In 2009–2010, he was a Jean Monnet Postdoctoral Fellow at the European University Institute in Florence. His most recent books include Theories of International Relations, Routledge (2014); Die Außenpolitik der europäischen Länder, Springer VS (2014); Grenzen der deutschen Europapolitik Springer VS, 2013; and Solidarität und internationale Gemeinschaftsbildung, Campus Verlag (2009). Among his publications are articles appearing in the European Journal of International Relations, the European Journal of International Law, the Journal of International Relations and Development and Zeitschrift für Internationale Beziehungen.

Alina Mihaela Stanculescu is a PhD in Political Science from the University of Florence, Italy. She currently works for the European External Action Service in Brussels.

Julie Smith DPhil in Politics, Oxford, UK, is Senior Lecturer in International Relations in the Department of Politics and International Studies, Cambridge University, and a Fellow in Politics at Robinson College. She was Head of the European Programme at Chatham House, the Royal Institute of International Affairs, from 1999 to 2003. Her research interests include European elections, EU enlargement, the UK's relations within the EU, and migration. Recent publications include, Reinvigorating European Elections: the Implications of Electing the European Commission, Royal Institute for International Affairs (2005); Reconciling Demand for Labour Migration with Public Concerns about Immigration: Germany and the UK with Christina Boswell and Meng-Hsuan Chou, Palgrave Macmillan (2005); The New Bilateralism: the UK's relations within the EU with Mariana Tsatsas, Wiley (2002), and several other works on European elections.

Nelleke van de Walle works as a Diplomat at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. She studied Contemporary History and International Relations at the University of Groningen, the Netherlands, where she worked as a lecturer in International Relations and as a Research Assistant at the Documentation Centre on Dutch Political Parties (DNPP). In cooperation with Gerrit Voerman, she has published Met het oog op Europa. Affiches voor de Europese verkiezingen, 1979–2009, on the European elections, Dutch political parties and election posters, Boom (2009).

Donatella M. Viola PhD in International Relations from the London School of Economics and Political Science, London, UK, is Assistant Professor in Politics and International Relations at the University of Calabria, Italy. Formerly Robert Schuman Scholar at the Directorate-General of the Secretariat of the European Parliament in Luxembourg and Marie Curie Fellow at the London School of Economics, she has also researched and lectured at the Universities of Bristol, Cardiff, Leeds, London, Plymouth, Regent's College, and the Richmond American University in Great Britain. Her main research interests are European foreign policy, the European Parliament, and political groups. She is the author of the book European Foreign Policy and the European Parliament in the 1990s, Ashgate (2000). Her other publications cover: elections to the European Parliament; national Parliaments; the European Constitution; international relations of the European Union; conflict in the former Yugoslavia; crises in the Gulf; Iran; and EU immigration and environmental policies.

Gerrit Voerman PhD in History from the University of Groningen, The Netherlands, is Professor of Development and functioning of the Dutch and European party systems and Director of the Documentation Centre on Dutch Political Parties (DNPP) of the University of Groningen. He is editor of the Yearbook of the Documentation Centre and of a series of volumes on Dutch political parties. He has published frequently on varying aspects of Dutch political parties and of European parties. On the European elections in the Netherlands he published: 'Les élections européennes aux Pays-Bas', in Pascal Delwit and Philippe Poirier, eds., Parlement puissant, électeurs absents? Les élections européennes de juin 2004, Editions de l'Université de Bruxelles (2005); and Met het oog op Europa. Affiches voor de Europese verkiezingen, 1979–2009 with Nelleke van de Walle, Boom (2009).

Hans Vollaard PhD in Political Science from Leiden University, the Netherlands, is Lecturer in Dutch and European Politics in the Department of Political Science at Leiden University. He recently published on Christianity in Dutch politics in the Journal of Politics and Religion and health politics in the Journal of Health Politics, Policy and Law and Health Policy. He has also co-edited the volumes Euroscepticism in the Netherlands, with Bartho Boer, Lemma (2005); State Territoriality and European Integration with Michael Burgess, Routledge (2006); and European Integration and Consensus Politics in the Netherlands, with J. Beyers and P. Dumont, Routledge (2014).

Marlene Wind PhD in Political Science from the European University Institute, Florence, Italy, is Professor and Director of the Centre for European Politics at the Department of Political Science, the University of Copenhagen. She is also co-founder of the Research Centre of Excellence Courts at the Faculty of Law, the University of Copenhagen, and Professor in Law at Oslo University. She has a long publication record and is one of Denmark's leading experts on the European Union, frequently contributing to the Danish EU debate and commenting on EU affairs in the national and international media.

FOREWORD

Why should one care about European Parliament elections?

This volume comes at an opportune time. The story of direct elections to the European Parliament has, after all, been a sorry narrative, with continued decline of voter interest, however brave a face one tries to put on it.

The elections to the European Parliament in 2014 have, however, the potential to be a watershed in the evolution of European democracy – so this is a suitable moment to take stock of European elections so far – a task admirably accomplished in this volume. The importance of these elections will be tested in the 2019 elections. The seeds sown this time round may begin to bear fruit then.

It is a virtue of this project that it understands that Europe in general, and the machinations of European democracy in particular, can only be understood by close attention to the specificities of the national – Member State – context. In this respect Europe is more federal, in the true sense of the word, than many federal states properly so called. In fact, the focus on the national context of European elections, up to and including the 2014 elections, helps to highlight the deepest pathologies of European democracy.

How so? At the heart of democracy there is choice: the people get to choose a ‘who’ and a ‘how’. Who will govern? He from the left or, perhaps she from the right? And how will one be governed, with austerity or growth? One-party democracy, even with free elections, is no democracy at all, since there is no choice.

But likewise, a Parliament such as the EP with full legislative powers embedded, however, in a governance structure which does not allow this primordial choice will be a very flawed democracy. The result will be a Parliament with considerable legislative and supervisory powers and little political authority.

After many ‘ostrich years’, the European head is finally coming out of the sand: there really is a problem with the legitimacy – or rather, the perception of legitimacy – of the European construct. It is not a mere ‘bee in the bonnet’ of some irritating academics disconnected from reality. Eurobarometer indications are at present at their lowest and the results of a highly respected Pew Center survey, too, show a remarkable fall in support for Europe among its citizens. Political differences on how to tackle the Eurocrisis are, worryingly, both reflective and constitutive of what one may call a solidarity deficit.

Even if the EU manages to make substantive and substantial strides in the construction of the much-vaunted Banking Union, or the new buzzword the ‘Securities Market Union’, it is not expected that any of the above will change significantly. The dramatic increase in the anti-European vote and the mainstreaming effect it has had on general politics are a sharp reminder of this.

It used to be denied, in both political and academic circles, that Europe still suffered from a democracy deficit. The usual trope that was trotted out to defend the democratic credentials of the Union was the historic increase in the powers of the European Parliament, which, even before the Lisbon Treaty, could credibly be called a veritable co-legislator with the Council. However, even the most devout Europhiles in the 'Amen Corner' of the Union cannot wish away another historical trend establishing an ironic parallel with the development of the European Parliament: the more powers it has gained, the greater popular indifference toward it seems to have developed, as is evidenced in this volume. The decline is in voter support as measured in voter participation to EP elections. The turnout rate has declined persistently from election to election ever since 1979, by reaching historical lows in many Member States, as well as for the Union as a whole, at the 2009 elections. The decline seems to have been arrested in 2014, but paradoxically that might be a result of anti-Europe mobilization. The figures are even more depressing if one excludes from the calculus those Member States in which there is obligatory voting.

The classic historical explanation – voter indifference to a chamber without powers – naturally has no longer any purchase and has disappeared. The alternative explanation usually dished out by hard-working if anguished MEPs, who are both humiliated and flummoxed by this historical trend, is to say in a million different ways that 'we have to explain Europe better' to European citizens. This was the initial line which the Commission also took after the debacle of the Constitution. It is a morally repugnant argument, a crass resurrection in all but name of Marxist false consciousness. Maybe we should change the stupid people who do not understand – as Bertolt Brecht famously and viciously quipped? To say that people do not turn out to vote for the EP because they do not understand how important such a vote is, is both wrong and contemptuous of the very democracy on which these elections are predicated.

But in fact the people are as wise as their elected representatives in the European Parliament and elsewhere. For they intuit the truth: with all its increased powers it still makes little systemic difference to Europe, and in Europe, whether and how the people vote for the European Parliament. The problem is not the quality of parliamentarians – which is the same as in national politics, ranging from the superb to the laughable – nor scandals or gravy trains or anything of the sort. It is, I believe, and as I have argued ad nauseam, structural, deriving from the very design of governance in the EU.

In essence, the two primordial features of any functioning democracy are missing: the grand principles of accountability and representation.

As regards accountability, even the basic condition of representative democracy – that at election time the citizens can choose their governors – does not operate in Europe. Neither does the concomitant power to have one's vote, if part of the majority party, have a decisive influence on who will govern.

In a similar vein, it is impossible to link – in any meaningful, systematic way – the results of elections to the European Parliament to the performance of the political groups within the preceding parliamentary session, in the way that is part of the mainstay of political accountability within Member States. Structurally, dissatisfaction with 'Europe' has no channel to affect, at the European level, the agents of European governance.

Likewise, at the most primitive level of democracy, there is simply no moment in the civic calendar of Europe when the citizen can influence directly the outcome of any policy choice facing the Community and Union in the way that citizens can when choosing between parties which offer more or less sharply distinct programmes at the national level. The political colour of the European Parliament only very weakly gets translated into the legislative and administrative output of the Union. The regular gentlemanly habit of switching EP Presidents and governance of Parliament midway is a mockery of politics and democracy.

The ‘political deficit’, to use the felicitous phrase of Renaud Dehousse, is at the core of the democracy deficit. The Commission, by its self-understanding, linked to its very ontology, can not be ‘partisan’ in a right–left sense; nor can the Council, by virtue of the haphazard political nature of its composition.

Democracy surely must have some meaningful mechanism for expression of voter preference predicated on choice among options, typically informed by stronger or weaker ideological orientation. That is an indispensable component of politics. Democracy without politics is an oxymoron. And yet, that is not only Europe, but also a defining feature of Europe, the ‘non-partisan’ nature of the Commission, that is celebrated. The stock phrase that the supranational Commission vindicates the European interest, whereas the intergovernmental Council is a clearing house for Member State interests, is, at best, naïve. Does the ‘European interest’ not necessarily involve political and ideological choices?

The two most primordial norms of democracy, the principle of accountability and the principle of representation are compromised in the very structure and process of the Union.

Against these structural defects in European accountability and representation it should surprise no one, least of all Members of the European Parliament, that voter turnout is in decline, reaching historical lows. European citizens are not stupid after all.

Europe’s historic choice – and risk

The political outcome of the 2014 elections offers for the very first time the prospect of meaningful change. The idea had been in the books for decades, but good ideas that remain in books are just such. They collect dust together with the books which contain them. So credit must go to the outgoing and incoming President of Parliament and others alongside him who had taken the bold step to transform the recent elections.

The idea was simple: at the elections to the European Parliament voters will effectively choose the next President of the Commission. It would be impossible – it was argued – with a measure of hope and defiance, for the European Council to override such choice ‘by the people’ and impose one of their back-room, non-transparent, rabbit-out-of-the-hat choices on Europe. And so it turned out!

The potential importance for European democracy of this development is as great or greater than anything proposed in the defunct Constitution. Interestingly and significantly, this happened without any changes to the current treaties, demonstrating, yet again, the primacy of politics over law.

Parliament vastly overplayed the strength of its legal and political arguments for this change. The argument based on Article 17 that the European Council is obligated to follow the parliamentary choice was overstated both as a matter of law and as a matter of politics. This Article allows the Parliament to block all proposals by the Council, but not to impose its candidate. It allows, likewise, the Council to propose but not to impose.

In effect, it recognizes that the European Council and the European Parliament represent, as is common in many federal states, two different forms of democratic legitimation and creates a design which requires the consent of both institutions in the choice of the President. Either institution has the legal power to block the process, but not to impose its choice. It is not a flawless formulation. One could imagine a composition of Parliament in which no candidate proposed by the Council receives the necessary majority. There is no express ‘fall back position’ but, on the whole, one can see a certain political wisdom in the procedure of Article 17: The President of the Commission requires legitimation and authority deriving from both 'houses of democracy' which make up the European Union.

In exercising its role of submitting a name to the Parliament, the European Council must take into account the results of the elections. Yet this cannot plausibly be interpreted as 'must follow.' It is clear that by speaking of consultations, and providing for majority voting, the Council is meant to be a deliberative body and not a mere rubber stamp. 'Taking into account' is a soft term and it could, for example, be credibly claimed that simply by nominating someone from the winning party due account has been taken of the elections.

There is certainly no legal duty on the European Council to follow the choice of Parliament, indeed, to suggest such would be to run against what I consider the letter and spirit of the law. Neither institution is meant to be a rubber stamp to the other.

If there was an imperative of the Council to accept the choice of Parliament, it must be a political imperative rather than a legal one. Nonetheless here, too, the issue is not straightforward.

The argument that in the current circumstance of European politics, the Heads of State and government speak with no less democratic legitimacy than the European Parliament is not a specious argument. Given that the leading candidate had an outright victory in only 12 of the Member States and in two others shared the podium with his rival adds poignancy to this point.

Equally, it is a stretch to claim that, other than in a highly formal sense, the European peoples had really indicated any one of the five lead candidates as their choice for the presidency of the Commission. The polls we had at the time these observations are being written are sketchy. However, the common observation that in most jurisdictions the elections remained 'national' and that few electors were casting their vote with a view to who would emerge as President of the Commission must hold a lot of truth. All this compromised the ability of the successful candidate to claim with credibility and with authority 'I was elected by the Peoples of Europe.'

In my opinion, there was no legal imperative but the reality of the electoral results. A clear victory in less than half the Member States, a low turnout in all except those countries where voting is obligatory, and a sense that the electors had not really turned their mind to the Presidential issue, all suggested that no compelling political imperative was dictated by these results.

So what was the European Council to do? The principled and correct approach was in fact followed and, paradoxically, the opposition of the British Prime Minister David Cameron was instrumental in creating procedural propriety. The European Council had the constitutional right and the duty to consult, take into account the results of the elections, and propose a candidate who enjoyed the support of at least a majority of Council Members, even if that necessitated a formal vote.

The selection of the President of the Commission should be the result of the voice of the peoples speaking through their two channels as provided by the treaty.

That is what they did by following the outcome of the elections and proposing the winning candidate as agreed by Parliament. It was prudent because to do otherwise would inflict huge damage to the image of the European Union, particularly at this moment.

But even more importantly, to follow the Spitzenkandidaten exercise logic was a great investment in the future of European democracy. Establishing this precedent will have the potential of transforming the next elections. It will help galvanize moves towards truer pan-European parties and it will create a new dynamic for the choice of future candidates. Above all, it will help Parliament match its formidable legislative powers with appropriate political authority, since the lesson of this outcome will most likely have a significant impact on voter behaviour in five years from now.

Foreword

It is wise to invest in the economic future of Europe as well as in its democratic future and promise and no one can deny the vast experience that Jean-Claude Juncker will bring to these tasks ahead.

However, the European Union faces a far more consequential choice: Is the logic of the Spitzenkandidaten to lead to a Commission which is 'political' but not 'partisan' in an ideological sense, as the outgoing President of the European Commission José Manuel Barroso maintains? Or if the people are to be heard and the political choice is to be real, should a 'partisan' Commission no longer be a dirty word? To be sure 'political' is good in the sense of the Commission not allowing itself to descend further into the role of super-secretariat of the other political institutions, but 'partisan'?

In my view, the whole exercise would be nullified if there is no movement, even if subtle or cautious, in that direction. At the heart of democracy there must be choice – not only as to whom should govern us, but as to how we should be governed. The lead candidate exercise, if it is to succeed, can not be perceived as a mere beauty contest. Part of the 'investment in the future' thesis is that, in moving to the next elections, voters must be put in a position whereby their choice is not only directed to the 'who', but also to the 'how' Europe should be governed. Their vote should have an impact on political and ideological programmes. And for that to happen, it must be seen, even if cautiously and prudently, that it makes a difference that the President belongs to the European People's Party rather than the Socialist family. For a Europe habituated to a result-based legitimacy, the adjustment will not be easy and not without costs. Different legitimacy issues will arise, but veritable democracy is political and requires courage. Let's not be afraid.

J.H.H. Weiler

President
European University Institute
Florence, Italy

Taylor and Francis
Not for distribution

5

GERMANY

Siegfried Schieder and José M. Magone

Figure 5.1 Map of Germany

Germany

Table 5.1 Germany profile

| | |
|--------------------------|--|
| EU entry year | 1952 ECSC; 1958 EEC and Euratom Founding Member |
| Schengen entry year | 1985 Original Signatory |
| MEPs elected in 2009 | 99 |
| MEPs under Lisbon Treaty | 96 |
| Capital | Berlin |
| Total area* | 357,137.2 km ² |
| Population | 81,843,743 |
| | Homogenous country with some ethnic minorities and large foreign population |
| | Ethnic minorities with special rights |
| | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • 60,000 Sorben and Wenden • 50,000 Danish minority • 12,000 Friesen • 70,000 Sinti and Roma |
| Population density | 229.4 km ² |
| Median age of population | 45.0 |
| Political system | Federal republic |
| Head of state | Horst Köhler, Christian Democratic Union (CDU), (July 2004–May 2010); Christian Wulff, Christian Democratic Union (CDU), (July 2010–Feb 2012); Joachim Gauck, no political affiliation, (March 2012 –) |
| Head of government | Chancellor Angela Merkel, Christian Democratic Union (CDU), (November 2005–). |
| Political majority | Christian Democratic Union (CDU)/Christian Social Union of Bavaria (CSU) and Social Democratic Party of Germany (SPD) Grand Coalition, (November 2005– October 2009); Christian Democratic Union (CDU)/Christian Social Union of Bavaria (CSU) and Free Democratic Party (FDP) Government Coalition, (October 2009–December 2013); Christian Democratic Union (CDU)/Christian Social Union of Bavaria (CSU) and Social Democratic Party of Germany (SPD) Government Coalition, (December 2013–). |
| Currency | Euro (€) Member of the Eurozone since 1999 |
| Prohead GDP in PPS | 31,300 € |

Source: Eurostat 2012, <http://epp.eurostat.ec.europa.eu/>.

Notes:

* Total area including inland waters.

 Population Density: the ratio of the annual average population of a region to the land area of the region.

1 Geographical position

Germany is located in west central Europe, bordered by nine countries: Denmark, Poland, the Czech Republic, Austria, Switzerland, France, Luxembourg, Belgium, and the Netherlands. Its territory, the fourth largest in the European Union, stretches from the North Sea and the Baltic Sea in the north to the Alps in the south. Germany boasts the largest population amongst the EU Member States, with almost 82 million inhabitants, although this figure is declining faster than other European countries due to the low birth rate (Eurostat 2012).

There are four recognized ethnic or cultural minorities which enjoy special political rights under the Grundgesetz (Basic Law), the European Convention on Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights: the Sorbian people in Brandenburg and Saxony, the Danish minority in Schleswig-Holstein, the Frisians in the northern part of the country, and the Sinti and Roma, estimated at about 70,000, mainly settled in the western part of the country and in Berlin (Federal Ministry of the Interior, 2010). Germany hosts about 6.6 million immigrants, corresponding to 8.2 per cent of the overall population concentrated in the Berlin, Hamburg, and Bremen areas, although it is worth underlining that the immigration flux has been stagnating and even declining over the last few years (Statistisches Bundesamt, 2013).

2 Historical background

The defeat of Germany in World War II and the subsequent occupation by the Allied Forces made the country vulnerable to the emerging East–West conflict, which started after 1947. The ‘Cold War’ inevitably led to the division between the Federal Republic of Germany (FRG), under the sphere of influence of the Western allies, and the German Democratic Republic (GDR), under Soviet control. This situation shaped the European foreign policy of the FRG until the fall of the Berliner Mauer (Berlin Wall) on 9 November 1989, which had been erected in 1961 by the GDR in order to prevent their citizens fleeing to the West. William Patterson has categorized the early years after the foundation of the FRG as ‘pre-sovereign’ due to the relevance of the occupying Allied Forces in West Germany (Paterson, 2005, 261). Only after the Deutschlandvertrag in 1955, did Germany gain what Peter Katzenstein defined as ‘semi-sovereignty’ given that the Cold War and the European integration process were major factors limiting the choices of the country (Katzenstein, 1987; see also Paterson, 2005, 261–5).

On 9 May 1950, under pressure from the United States, the French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman announced the establishment of the European Coal and Steel Community (ECSC), which envisaged reconciliation with West Germany as a key objective in order to realize the process of European integration. West Germany’s status as a founding member of the European Community remained an important factor of the identity of the country (Clemens et al., 2008, 97–108). The project also allowed the rebuilding of a new culture within the country, including the so-called ‘politics of remembrance’ aimed at confronting as well as overcoming the past (Vergangenheitsbewältigung). Although the German Constitution was seen as a sort of democratic re-education, it was by no means clear that the West German population was able to match its democratic aspirations (Almond and Verba, 1963). After the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989, German reunification was deemed possible only within the European integration process, thus creating the conditions for the reunification of the European continent. Article 23 of the Basic Law states that:

With a view to establishing a united Europe, the Federal Republic of Germany shall participate in the development of the European Union that is committed to democratic, social, and federal principles, to the rule of law, and to the principle of subsidiarity, and that guarantees a level of protection of basic rights essentially comparable to that afforded by this Basic Law. To this end the Federation may transfer sovereign powers by a law with the consent of the Bundesrat. The establishment of the European Union, as well as changes in its treaty foundations and comparable regulations that amend or supplement this Basic Law, or make such amendments or supplements possible, shall be subject to paragraphs (2) and (3) of Article 79.

3 Geopolitical profile

Defeat in the World War II represented a major turning point for the foreign policy of Germany and its subsequent division into a Western Federal Republic and an Eastern Democratic Republic after 1949 was a major traumatic experience. Until 1989, both were at the forefront of the Cold War between the United States and the Soviet Union. Whilst the former became a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) in 1955, the latter joined the Warsaw Pact in 1956. Only after inter-German relations were normalized in the wake of the Basic Treaty of 1972, was the path opened for both German states to enter the United Nations on 18 September 1973.

The fall of the Berlin Wall leading up to reunification allowed the changing of the geopolitical position of the country. Although the new reunified Federal Republic of Germany was very keen to emphasize allegiance to NATO, the Soviet Union was no longer the common enemy after 1991. The reorientation of NATO and the upgrading of the European Union's Common Foreign and Security Policy led to a change in German foreign policy towards a peace policy approach (Friedenspolitik). Although German troops were deployed in Kosovo, Macedonia, Afghanistan, and Somalia, their main task was to restore and keep the peace. The self-confidence of German foreign policy became clear when, along with France, former Foreign Minister Joschka Fischer refused to take part in the invasion of Iraq that was proposed and then carried out by the US Bush Administration in 2003 with the 'coalition of the willing' yet without an explicit mandate from the UN Security Council. One of the main reasons for this disagreement stemmed from Germany's socialized and internalized policy of peace and multilateralism, which was widely supported by its population (Bulmahn et al., 2010). This attitude, in line with the mission and vocation of the United Nations, was also appreciated by Third World countries and emerging economies, because it upholds human rights and international law, and contributes to peaceful solutions within a global governance framework. The vigour of German foreign policy has been backed up by its strong economy, giving the country a strong say at the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund, and in the European Union (Guérot and Leonard, 2011, 2). Finally, Germany can be considered as the most prominent member of the Eurozone, thus bearing an enhanced responsibility towards its stability.

4 Overview of the political landscape

Germany is a federal republic comprised of 16 constituent states, the so-called Bundesländer. The Basic Law stipulates in great detail which issues fall within the competence of the federal government and which devolve to the regional states. Most policies are implemented by so-called 'executive federalism', which means that the federal level sets framework laws that are then implemented by the government of the Bundesländer. Although federalist elements dominate the states' administration, formulations such as 'unitarian' are used to characterize the German federal state (Hesse, 1962).

The President has only formal representative powers and is elected for a five-year period by a federal assembly consisting of the two chambers of parliament, the lower chamber, Bundestag, and the upper chamber, Bundesrat, along with selected representatives of society. The Bundestag, which represents a 'working parliament' (Arbeitsparlament) rather than a 'talking shop' (Redeparlament), is the central institution in the German political system. On the eve of the 2009 Euro-election, the President was Horst Köhler, later replaced by Christian Wulff in June 2010 and since 18 March 2012 by Joachim Gauck, a former GDR civil rights activist.

Federal power lies in the hands of the German Chancellor, who has been the Christian Democrat Angela Merkel since 2005. The federal government is accountable to the Bundestag, which can issue a motion of censure against it. In this case, however, the opposition has to find not only grounds for denying confidence to the executive, but also to nominate an alternative candidate to replace the Chancellor. The federal government has to take into account the rulings of the Federal Constitutional Court and change legislation accordingly. In the context of the European Union, constitutional complaints (Verfassungsklagen) about issues of sovereignty are addressed regularly at the German Federal Constitutional Court. Before the Bundestag and Bundesrat could finally approve the Lisbon Treaty, it was necessary to wait for the ruling of the Federal Constitutional Court (Bundesverfassungsgericht, 2009). Although Germany's highest court established that the treaty was not fundamentally incompatible with the German Basic Law, it called for a halt to the ratification process until the German Parliament changed domestic law to strengthen the role of the country's legislative bodies in implementing European Union laws. Finally, on 8 September 2009, after the court ruling and the parliamentary adjustment of legislation, the text of the Lisbon Treaty was approved (Müller-Graff, 2010).

5 Brief account of the political parties

Prior to 1983, the Federal Republic of Germany had only a two-and-a-half party system: the Christlich Demokratische Union/Christlich-Soziale Union, CDU/CSU (Christian Democratic Union/Christian Social Union), the Sozialdemokratische Partei Deutschlands, SPD (Social Democratic Party of Germany) and the Freie Demokratische Partei, FDP (Free Democratic Party). The negative perception of the very fragmented party system during the Weimar Republic and the consequences leading up to Nazi rule set a high value for political stability and moderation of party politics. The Basic Law introduced the principle of a preventive defence of democracy, should any anti-systemic extreme right-wing or left-wing political parties try to enter the political stage. A body called 'Defence of the Constitution' (Verfassungsschutz) publishes regular reports on extremist parties and movements at federal and regional levels (Rudzio, 2006, 97).

On 13 January 1980, the foundation of Die Grünen (The Green Party) contributed towards the changing of the traditional political landscape. Emerging in the 1970s out of social movements, the Greens were critical of established politics and wanted a new orientation in terms of economic growth. In 1993, they merged with Bündnis 90 (Alliance '90/The Green Party), consisting of three non-Communist political groups from former East Germany. Over two decades, the Greens gained an increasing popular consensus, winning at the regional level and entering a coalition government at the federal level together with the Social Democrats under Chancellor Gerhard Schröder between 1998 and 2005 (Viola, 2010).

After the fall of the Berlin Wall, a fifth party loomed on the political horizon, the Partei des Demokratischen Sozialismus, PDS (Party of Democratic Socialism), which was the direct heir to the former Sozialistische Einheitspartei Deutschlands, SED (Socialist Unity Party), the ruling party in East Germany that had changed its name in the last days of the GDR. Between 1990 and 2006, the party remained exclusively at the regional level and was particularly strong in the new Bundesländer of Mecklenburg-Vorpommern, Brandenburg, Thuringia, Saxony, Saxony-Anhalt, and Berlin whilst it was non-existent in the old Bundesländer.

In January 2005, a new party called Arbeit und soziale Gerechtigkeit-Die Wahlalternative, WASG (Labour and Social Justice-The Electoral Alternative) emerged, comprising of more radical trade union representatives unhappy with the SPD, and small extreme left parties along with members of the German Communist Party, under the leadership of former SPD President and former Minister of Finance, Oskar Lafontaine (Viola, 2010). One of the main grievances

Table 5.2 List of political parties in Germany

| Original name | Abbreviation | English translation |
|---|---------------------|--|
| Christlich Demokratische Union Deutschlands | CDU | Christian Democratic Union |
| Sozialdemokratische Partei Deutschlands | SPD | Social Democratic Party of Germany |
| Bündnis 90/Die Grünen | | Alliance '90/The Green Party |
| Freie Demokratische Partei | FDP | Free Democratic Party |
| Die Linke | DPS | Left Party |
| Christlich-Soziale Union in Bayern | CSU | Christian Social Union of Bavaria |
| Freie Wähler | FW | Free Voters |
| Die Republikaner | REP | The Republicans |
| Mensch-Umwelt-Tierschutz | MUT | Man, Environment, and Animal Protection |
| Familien-Partei Deutschlands Familie | | Family Party of Germany |
| Piratenpartei Deutschland Piraten | | German Pirate Party |
| Rentner Partei Deutschlands | RENTNER | Pensioners' Party of Germany |
| Ökologische-Demokratische Partei | ÖDP | Ecological Democratic Party |
| Deutsche Volksunion | DVU | German People's Union |
| Rentnerinnen Und Rentner Partei | RPP | Female and Male Pensioners' Party |
| Feministische Partei-Die Frauen | Die Frauen | Feminist Party – The Women |
| Partei Bibeltreuer Christen | PBC | Party of Bible-abiding Christians |
| Bündnis Für Deutschland, Für Demokratie Durch Volksabstimmung | | Association for Germany, for Democracy through Referenda |
| Ab Jetzt | | from Now |
| Das Generationen-Bündnis | 50 Plus | Alliance of Generations |
| 50 Plus | | 50 Plus |
| Die Grauen | | The Greys |
| Bayernpartei | BP | Bavaria Party |
| Die Violetten: Für Spirituelle Politik | | The Violets: for Spiritual Policy |
| Gerechtigkeit Braucht Bürgerrechte – Wir Danken Für Ihr Vertrauen! Für Volksentscheide | Wählergemeinschaft | Justice Needs Citizens' Rights – Thanks for your Trust! For People's Decision-Making |
| Christliche Mitte: Für Ein Deutschland Nach Gottes Geboten | CM | Christian Centre: for a Germany according to God's Commandments |
| Partei Für Arbeit, Umwelt Und Familie, Christen Für Deutschland | AUF | Party for Labour, Environment and Family Christians for Germany |
| Aufbruch Für Bürgerrechte, Freiheit Und Gesundheit | AUFBRUCH | New Beginning for Civil Rights, Freedom and Health |
| Freie Bürger Initiative | FBI | Free Citizens' Initiative |
| Deutsche Kommunistische Partei | DKP | German Communist Party |
| Europa-Demokratie-Esperanto | EDE | Europe-Democracy-Esperanto |
| Bürgerrechtsbewegung Solidarität Büro | | Civic Rights Movement Solidarity |
| Partei Der Sozialen Gleichheit-Sektion Der Vierten Internationale | PSG | Party of Social Equality-Section of the Fourth International |
| Deutsche Partei | DP | The German Party |
| Kommunistische Partei Deutschlands | KPD | Communist Party of Germany |
| Nationaldemokratische Partei Deutschlands | NPD | National Democratic Party of Germany |
| Partei Des Demokratischen Sozialismus | PDS | Party of Democratic Socialism |
| Arbeit und soziale Gerechtigkeit – Die Wahlalternative | WASG | Labour and Social Justice – The Electoral Alternative | was the introduction of labour market reforms called Hartz IV, but also Germany's military engagement in Afghanistan (Jesse and Lang, 2008, 75–81; Hough and Olsen, 2007). The charismatic former SPD politician Oskar Lafontaine, who also joined the WASG, contributed to the achievement of its official representation in regional and national Parliaments. In 2007, a merger between the PDS and the WASG led to the formation of a new political party, which briefly took the name of Die Linke (The Left).

This party became a major challenge for the left wing of the SPD. At the 2009 federal elections, the SPD had its worst result ever, declining from 34.2 per cent to 23 per cent, whilst Die Linke was able to improve from 8.7 to 11.9 per cent by becoming the fourth largest party in the Bundestag, even if it was still ostracized from national government. The party is still ostracized from national government politics.

According to Oskar Niedermayer, the two main conflict cleavages in the German party system are socio-economic and socio-cultural. The former is based on the growing divergence of views on the future of the welfare state and labour market reform. The latter is related to 'survival' materialist values versus 'self-expressive' post-materialist values (Niedermayer, 2007, 118). Traditional cleavages related to religion and class have eroded and a more volatile electorate has emerged, which is difficult for parties to encapsulate. This volatility also led to the considerable electoral decline of the two 'Volksparteien', the CDU/CSU and the SPD (Saalfeld, 2005, 70).

5.1 Party attitudes towards the European Union

European integration has not been a major dividing line between German political parties. No general disagreement exists about the merits of a project that has been consistently supported by the political elite over the years (Scheider, 2011, 40–7; see also, Bulmer and Paterson, 2010). All political parties can be considered more or less pro-European, even if there are some differences.

The CDU presents itself as the European party par excellence in Germany and its approach is moderate in all policy dimensions, although economic efficiency and competitiveness are quite central. In spite of this, the concept of a 'social market economy' based on economic competitiveness remains a crucial foundation. The CDU sets limits to EU enlargement by offering a 'privileged partnership' with Turkey. Its Bavarian sister party, the CSU, places more emphasis on the 'Europe of Fatherlands' discourse, like the Gaullists in France, and wants an upgrading of the subnational regions within the EU multilevel governance system. In its view, there should be not only geographical limits to EU enlargements, but also limits on the scope of European integration in terms of the transfer of powers to the supranational level.

By contrast, the SPD stresses the international role of the European Union, the need for coordination in employment policy and the strengthening of social Europe, whilst the FDP puts a greater emphasis on political and economic liberalism as well as the protection of civic and political rights. The Green Party highlights the EU's potential to take a leadership role in a new global ecological paradigm and the need for the European Union to become a force for peace, far from the war logic perpetuated by the United States. Finally, Die Linke wants a change of direction in the European Union, from neo-liberal to more socially friendly policies, with particular attention to gender equality issues.

6 Public opinion and the European Union

As already discussed, the origin of the FRG is intrinsically linked to the process of European integration (Anderson and Goodman, 1993). From its outset, the Germans have vigorously supported the European project, which represented an opportunity to regain their shattered identity in the eyes of the world after the catastrophic totalitarian period of the Third Reich (Schild, 2003, 32). The constellation of domestic and European developments set specific parameters for the symbiotic relationship between the FRG and Europe, so that the European integration design transformed the 'relationship between Germany and Europe to one of Germany in Europe' (Katzenstein, 1997, 19; see also Bulmer et al., 2000, 2010). All German parliamentary parties supported this Europeanized state identity, which regarded the EEC after 1958 as an emergent 'civil power', interested in shaping world politics towards multilateralism and peace (Maull, 1990). However, since the 1990s, such unconditional support has given way to a more sceptical agenda (Schieder, 2011, 34) and its strong European vocation 'is no longer securely anchored in public opinion' (Paterson, 2010, 41).

Although Germans have been in favour of EU membership for more than three decades, as shown in the Eurobarometer surveys between 1979 and 1989 (see Figure 5.2), after German reunification this position changed, especially in East Germany (Scheuer and Schmitt, 2009, 580). By the late 1990s, most people believed that EU membership had brought more disadvantages than advantages. Only in the new millennium did the perception that the EU was of benefit pick up again, particularly after 2005 (Eurobarometer, 2008). This was particularly the case under the leadership of Chancellor Merkel, when a considerable improvement in the economic situation was registered, with unemployment declining from five million to slightly above three million even during the financial crisis in 2008–2009.

However, an overall air of scepticism pervades the minds of the German public towards specific aspects of EU membership. Whilst support for a common security and defence policy and for a European Constitution are high and even above the EU average, the level of trust in the EU as a whole is below average, and EU enlargement is even rejected outright by the majority of the German public (Schieder, 2011, 36). Given the shift in German attitudes towards the EU, the political parties represented in the German parliament had incentives to exploit this scepticism in the public sphere. According to Andreas Wilkens, although support for European integration may decline in the short term, it is deemed to remain intact in the long term, being extremely connected to the identity of post-war Germany (Wilkens, 2004, 76).

7 National and EP electoral systems

After the adoption of the absolute-majority two round system (TRS) in the German Empire (Kaiserreich) between 1871 and 1918 and the negative experience of the pure proportional representation system in the Weimar Republic, the Parliamentary Council forged a new electoral system in 1949 as a result of inter-party bargaining between democratic forces in West Germany. Whereas originally it was considered to be provisional, this system has remained virtually unchanged.

In accordance with Article 38 of the Basic Law of the Federal Republic of Germany, the members of the Bundestag are elected with a general, direct, free, equal, and secret vote. Whilst these five principles of voting are laid out in the Basic Law, the Federal Electoral Act regulates the German electoral system for national elections. German elections follow what is commonly known as a personalized proportional system (Personalisiertes Verhältniswahlrecht) or as a mixed member proportional (MMP) system that combines a personal vote in single-member districts with the principle of proportional representation.

As the MMP system has not so far unveiled any great negative effects, it therefore enjoys a high level of institutionalized legitimacy in Germany. As a result, its basic rules have remained unaltered and just some minor changes have been introduced. Since 1953, a switch to a dual-vote system has occurred, allowing citizens to cast two ballots in order to choose their representatives in Parliament. Whereas the first vote, Erststimme, is personal as it is conferred to a particular candidate in one of the nowadays 299 single-member constituencies, Bundestagswahlkreise, the second, Zweitstimme, is a party vote, awarded to an electoral list at the federal state level (Landesliste). This determines the relative strengths of the parties in the Bundestag and, more importantly, it may establish which parliamentary group or coalition of parties will reach the majority and, as a consequence, who will become Chancellor.

Figure 5.2 German attitude to the European Union: 1999–2009

Source: Eurobarometer (2008) http://ec.europa.eu/public_opinion/archives/eb_arch_en.htm

Moreover, a 5 per cent threshold for the election of members of Parliament was introduced in three constituencies in order to prevent the fragmentation of the party system, one of the major problems during the Weimar Republic. If a party fails to gain more than 5 per cent of all votes, it is not represented in the Bundestag, unless the party is able to win in at least three constituencies. Until 2009, the distribution of seats was calculated according to the so-called Hare-Niemeyer method, which reflects the strength of the smaller parties better than any others. Yet, since the Bundestag election in 2009, the so-called Sainte-Laguë/Schepers method has been introduced, whereby seats are distributed first amongst those candidates who gained more votes in the constituencies, whilst the remaining seats are then allocated to the candidates on the party list.

The number of constituency seats is crucial since it can affect the composition of the German Bundestag. If a party gains more constituency seats through the first vote than it is entitled according to its proportion of seats through the second vote, it nonetheless keeps these so-called 'overhang' seats (Überhangmandate). Hence, the Bundestag may exceed the number of 598 seats, such as after the 2009 general elections when it reached 622. It is worth mentioning that in July 2008, Germany's highest court ruled that the effect known as 'negative vote weight', arising in connection with overhang mandates, is unconstitutional (Bundesverfassungsgericht, 2008).

The 99 German members of the European Parliament are elected in a general, direct, free, equal, and secret ballot. The electoral system is proportional, with 'closed' lists of nominated candidates, meaning that voters do not have influence on the choice of candidates. Whilst in the past the Hare-Niemeyer method was used with a 5 per cent legal threshold, since 2009 the Sainte-Laguë/Schepers method has been introduced in Germany, allowing a high level of proportionality. Political parties can submit either a federal list or lists at the level of the Bundesländer. All parties field national lists, with the exception of the Christian Democrats (CDU) and the Bavarian Christian Socials (CSU). Whilst the latter present their list only in Bavaria, where their constituency is concentrated, the Christian Democrats do it in all other Bundesländer. There is only one national electoral district for these elections, and in order to avoid fragmentation of the party system and to reduce the chances of extremist parties, a 5 per cent threshold was imposed, as in the case of the general elections. This clause, however, was held to be unconstitutional in November 2011 by the Federal Constitutional Court, which argued that it violates the principle of equal opportunities for all political parties (Bundesverfassungsgericht, 2011).

8 A glance at the EP and national elections

The first European Parliament elections took place in Germany on 10 June 1979, following two regional elections in Rhineland-Palatinate on 18 March 1979 and Schleswig-Holstein on 29 April 1979, after the elections for the Federal President on 23 May 1979, and in conjunction with two local elections in Saarland and Rhineland-Palatinate. This explained the higher turnouts of 81.1 and 81.5 per cent in Saarland and Rhineland-Palatinate, respectively, against the average national figure of 65.7 per cent (Menke, 1985, 80). Apart from the innovative nature of the EP elections, political parties were faced with the general phenomenon of the public's lack of awareness of and indifference to European Parliament elections. In this sense, the main political parties, the CDU/CSU, SPD, and FDP, had to turn their political campaigns into educational seminars in order to fill this gap. An electoral system based on proportional representation allowed for national or regional closed lists. Moreover, unlike other elections, citizens had only one vote, meaning that the campaign, which was usually carried out based on the personalization of candidates, was replaced by a more programmatic approach.

In terms of the campaign, the CDU and FDP adjusted their manifestos to those drafted by their respective transnational party groups. In particular, the FDP adopted entirely the European Liberal and Democrats group's 'Programme for Europe', adding to it a two-page national appeal. Although the FDP did not agree with all policy proposals, it clearly emphasized a European electoral strategy under the slogan 'A Liberal Europe' (Menke, 1985, 72, 74).

As to the CDU, its role was instrumental in formulating the European People's Party manifesto. However, pressure from its sister party CSU, headed by Prime Minister of Bavaria, Franz Joseph Strauß, led to a more polarizing national programme and campaign approach. The main slogan of the CDU changed from 'Politik für die Freiheit-Glück für die Menschen-CDU für Europa' ('A policy for freedom-happiness for the people-CDU for Europe') to 'Deutsche wählt das freie und soziale Europa. Gegen ein sozialistisches Europa' ('Germans vote for a free and Social Europe. Against a Socialist Europe') (Menke, 1985, 72-3).

The CSU was even more polarized than the CDU with its slogan 'Mut zur Freiheit-Chance für Europa' ('Freedom Yes-Socialism No' and 'The Courage of Freedom-a Chance for Europe') (Menke, 1985, 72). However, Franz Josef Strauß had to deal with inner party dissent in relation to the nomination of the quite conservative candidate Otto von Habsburg as head of list of the CSU. In particular, the new General Secretary Edmund Stoiber regarded the latter as a reactionary and preferred Count von Stauffenberg, the son of the former officer who took part in the assassination attempt of Hitler on 20 July 1944 (Menke, 1985, 71). Although supportive of the EU, the CSU differed from the other parliamentary parties in their position towards European integration. The CSU presented a 'Europe of Fatherlands' discourse, in which the national interest was at the forefront. Moreover, it emphasized the need to strengthen the position of the Bundesländer at the European level (Menke, 1985).

As to the SPD, traditionally more on the right of the political spectrum compared to other European Socialist parties, it moved slightly to the left in its electoral programme and during the campaign in order to be more consistent with the Euro-manifesto of the Socialist Group of the European Parliament. The main slogans were 'Sprecher für Deutschland-geachtet in Europa: Die Sozialdemokraten Willy Brandt and Helmut Schmidt-SPD' ('Spokesmen for Germany-respected throughout Europe; The Social-Democrats Willy Brandt and Helmut Schmidt-SPD') and 'Für ein Europa der Arbeitnehmer' ('For a Workers' Europe') (Menke, 1985, 71). The SPD obtained 40.8 per cent of the vote and secured 35 seats in the Strasbourg arena.

Although the CDU/CSU used a polarization strategy, the overall difference in terms of share of the vote was about 2 per cent between the 1976 general election and the 1979 European Parliament election. Subsequently, the victory of the SPD/FDP coalition government and the defeat of CDU/CSU Chancellor candidate Franz Josef Strauß proved that the Euro-election was not a mere dress rehearsal for the 1980 federal electoral contest. The CDU achieved 39.1 per cent and 34 seats, whilst the CSU got 10.1 per cent and eight seats. The FDP attracted 6 per cent of vote and managed to send seven representatives to the European Parliament.

Moreover, the first direct EP election was a key factor in structuring the highly diverse Green movement towards a fully-fledged political party. The Greens achieved 3.2 per cent nationwide and thus were entitled to benefit from 4.8 million DM of public funding (Menke, 1985, 79).

At the 1983 general elections, a change of power took place, which led to a new coalition government between the CDU/CSU and the FDP under the leadership of Chancellor Helmut

Table 5.3 National election results in Germany: 1976–2009

| Political Parties | 1976 | 1980 | 1983 | 1987 | 1990 | 1994 | 1998 | 2002 | 2005 | 2009 |
|----------------------------|------|------|------|------|------------------|------|------|------|------|------|
| CDU/CSU | 48.6 | 44.5 | 48.8 | 44.3 | 43.8 | 41.5 | 35.1 | 38.5 | 35.2 | 33.8 |
| SPD | 42.6 | 42.9 | 38.2 | 37.0 | 33.5 | 36.4 | 40.9 | 38.5 | 34.2 | 23.0 |
| FDP | 7.9 | 10.6 | 7.0 | 9.1 | 11.0 | 6.9 | 6.2 | 7.4 | 9.8 | 14.6 |
| DieGrünen ¹ | — | 1.5 | 5.6 | 8.3 | 3.8 ⁴ | 7.4 | 6.7 | 8.6 | 8.1 | 10.7 |
| | | | | | 1.2 ⁵ | | | | | |
| PDS/Die Linke ² | — | — | — | — | 2.4 | 4.4 | 5.1 | 4.0 | 8.7 | 11.9 |
| NPD | 0.3 | 0.2 | 0.2 | 0.6 | 0.3 | — | 0.3 | 0.4 | 1.6 | 1.5 |
| DP | — | — | — | — | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| KPD/DKP ³ | 0.3 | 0.2 | 0.2 | — | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Others | 0.3 | 0.1 | 0.0 | 0.7 | 4.0 | 3.4 | 5.7 | 2.6 | 2.4 | 4.5 |
| Total | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Turnout | 90.7 | 88.6 | 89.1 | 84.3 | 77.8 | 79.0 | 82.2 | 79.1 | 77.7 | 70.8 |

Source: Bundeswahlleiter (2009) www.Bundeswahlleiter.De/De/Bundestagswahlen.

Notes:

¹ 1980–1990: Die Grünen Y.; 1990: DieGrünen/Bündnis 90; 1994–today: Bündnis 90/Die Grünen.

² 1990–2004: Partei Des Demokratischen Sozialismus; 2005: Partei Des Demokratischen Sozialismus + Die Wahlalternative Arbeit und soziale Gerechtigkeit = Die Linke.

³ 1949–1953: Kommunistische Partei Deutschlands (afterwards illegal); 1972–today: Kommunistische Partei Deutschlands.

⁴ Die Grüne.

⁵ Bündnis 90.

Kohl. Moreover, for the first time the Greens achieved parliamentary representation one year and three months after the general elections, when the executive was still enjoying its honeymoon. As such, the opposition did not register substantial gains.

The 1984 European Parliament election sanctioned the rise of the Greens as a new party, in spite of the prejudices of the other established political parties, due to their links to more extreme left-wing elements, particularly in the terror scene of the 1980s (Bulmer and Patterson, 1986, 197–8).

As previously, the CDU presented itself as the European party in Germany. It worked closely with the EPP to coordinate its national manifesto with the transnational one. The main slogan was devised around the new Kohl government and was 'Aufwärts mit Deutschland Mit uns für Europa' (Germany's getting better-with us for Europe.) The campaign took a more Nationalist orientation, emphasizing the role of the Bundesländer, particularly Bavaria, within a 'Europe of nation-states'. The party was also under pressure due to the growing protests of farmers and the cutbacks in agricultural subsidies introduced by the agriculture minister in accordance with the CSU portfolio (Bulmer and Patterson, 1986, 199).

Following bribery scandals involving key figures of the FDP, such as Count Otto Lambsdorff, Hans-Dietrich Genscher decided to step down as leader and many left-wing Liberals left the party. In terms of the electoral campaign, the FDP relied on the European Liberal and Democratic parliamentary group's Euro-manifesto and did not invest very much in the campaign (Bulmer and Patterson, 1986, 200).

As to the SPD, despite the slogan 'Macht Europa stark' ('Make Europe strong'), its campaign mainly focussed on national issues, failing nevertheless to transform the EP electoral contest into a test for the ruling centre-right coalition. In the background, European issues were raised during the campaign, especially with regard to the relevance of the Franco-German friendship for European integration, Europe's role in international affairs, and the development of European defence policy, particularly in relation to NATO. Finally, the active participation of women was addressed with regard to the introduction of female candidates in the SPD list, although their names appeared mostly at the bottom, so that they had only a few chances to be elected (Bulmer and Patterson, 1986, 201).

Under the main slogan 'think globally, act locally', the Greens introduced new themes into the European campaign, criticizing the Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) and its detrimental effects on the environment, warning against the rise of a superpower Europe, and calling for equal opportunities for women (Bulmer and Patterson, 1986, 203).

The CDU obtained 34 seats by achieving 37.5 per cent of the vote, thus losing 1.6 per cent in comparison to 1979; the SPD got 33 seats with its 37.4 per cent, 3.4 per cent less than in the previous election; and the CSU secured seven seats with its 8.5 per cent of the vote, 1.6 per cent less. In addition, there were the three seats nominated by the Berlin Chamber of Deputies, two for the CDU and one for the SPD. The Greens appeared as the real winners with their 8.2 per cent of the vote, five points more than in 1979, and secured seven seats in the EP arena. By contrast, the FDP with its 4.8 per cent of the vote, 1.2 less than in the previous election, failed to meet the required threshold by a whisker and thus any representation in Strasbourg.

The subsequent EP election held in 1989 at the end of the national electoral cycle registered the lowest turnout in the German history of all national, local, and regional elections. In spite of a booming economy combined with a low unemployment rate, the coalition government led by Christian Democrat Chancellor Helmut Kohl suffered from a downturn in terms of support. The CDU campaign coordinated by Secretary-General Heiner Geißler used a polarization strategy with its provocative slogan 'Radikale und SPD-Zukunft und Wohlstand ade' ('Radicals and SPD-Goodbye to the Future and Wealth') that raised considerable dissent within the party (Der Spiegel, 12 June 1989a, 25–7). The CDU strategy was nationally oriented, although its electoral manifesto was intertwined with that of the European People's Party (EPP). After the death of Franz Josef Strauß in October 1988, the CSU struggled to find another charismatic politician who could achieve the same mobilizing effects as his predecessor. Amongst the coalition government parties, with only 8.2 per cent of the vote and eight seats, the CSU appeared as the great loser, challenged by the new opposition party Republikaner that coined an ironic slogan 'Nur Bayern können CSU wählen' ('Only Bavarians can vote for the CSU') (Der Spiegel, 26 June 1989b, 25).

Table 5.4 EP election results in Germany: 1979–2004

| Political Party | 1979 | | 1984 | | 1989 | | 1994 | | 1999 | | 2004 | |
|-----------------|------|-------|------|-------|------|-------|------|-------|------|-------|------|-------|
| | % | Seats | % | Seats | % | Seats | % | Seats | % | Seats | % | Seats |
| CDU | 39.1 | 34 | 37.5 | 34 | 29.5 | 25 | 32.1 | 39 | 39.3 | 40 | 36.5 | 40 |
| SPD | 40.8 | 35 | 37.4 | 33 | 37.3 | 31 | 32.2 | 40 | 30.7 | 33 | 21.5 | 23 |
| FDP | 6 | 4 | 4.8 | — | 5.6 | 4 | 4.1 | — | 3.0 | — | 6.1 | 7 |
| CSU | 10.1 | 8 | 8.5 | 7 | 8.2 | 7 | 6.8 | 8 | 9.4 | 10 | 8 | 9 |
| Greens | — | — | 8.2 | 7 | 8.4 | 8 | 10.1 | 12 | 6.4 | 7 | 11.9 | 13 |
| PDS/Die Linke | — | — | — | — | — | — | 4.7 | — | 5.8 | 6 | 6.1 | 7 |
| Republikaner | — | — | — | — | 7.1 | 6 | 3.9 | — | 1.7 | — | 1.9 | — |
| Others | 4 | — | 3.6 | — | 3.9 | — | 6.1 | — | 3.7 | — | 8 | — |
| Total | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 | 100 |
| Turnout | 65.7 | — | 56.7 | — | 62.3 | — | 60.0 | — | 45.3 | — | 43 | — |

Source: Bundeswahlleiter (2009) www.Bundeswahlleiter.De/De/Europawahlen.

Under the leadership of the charismatic Franz Schönhuber, the Republikaner presented a more critical approach towards the EC, with a mix of law and order issues, anti-immigration discourse, and nationalism, which were instrumental in paving the way for its victory at the expense of the CDU/CSU.

Under the motto 'Wir sind Europa' ('We are Europe'), the main opposition party, the SPD, tried to develop a long-term strategy in order to gain power at the federal level. The party achieved 37.3 per cent of the votes cast, 0.1 less in relation to the 1984 European election, thus losing two of its 33 seats.

By contrast, amongst the opposition parties, the more left-wing Greens appeared as the winners with their 8.4 of the vote. This outcome was favoured by the Greens' dynamic campaign, that under the slogan 'Europa: Geschäfte ohne Grenzen' ('Europe: Business without Borders'), criticized the capitalist nature of the European project, and by the controversial nomination of Rudko Kawczynski, a stateless Roma, who according to the law was not entitled to run elections (Der Spiegel, 12 June 1989c, 124). Finally, the FDP was able again to achieve representation in the European parliamentary arena in Strasbourg.

The 1994 European elections were the first contested within the framework of Germany's post-reunification. Although no dramatic changes had occurred in the political landscape, the successor party of the 'Socialist Unity Party of Germany', the Party of Democratic Socialism, PDS (Partei des Demokratischen Sozialismus) was very keen to establish itself beyond its traditional constituencies in the eastern Bundesländer. Moreover, Euro-elections took place in a super election year (Superwahljahr), when 19 elections were scheduled, culminating in the national elections in October. By representing a crucial rehearsal for the federal electoral contests, EP elections gained more significance as a trendsetter. In total, 24 political parties and groups ran the race. In 1994, after a period of recession, the economy started to pick up again and Chancellor Helmut Kohl exploited this growth as a tool against the opposition parties.

The Christian Democrats pursued a pro-European campaign, albeit mainly dominated by domestic issues. Their main poster, 'Against War, Violence and Terrorism in Europe: Peace for Everybody!' appeared dull, disclosing an undefined and utopian approach to European elections (Paterson et al., 1996, 76). Yet, the party eventually managed to perform better than expected by scoring 32 per cent of the vote, thus gaining 2.5 points more than in 1989. In contrast, the CSU shifted more to the right by conducting a sort of 'Europe of the Fatherlands' campaign, centred on need to carry forward the interests of Bavaria. This strategy allowed the party to get 6.8 per cent of the vote, thus limiting its loss by 1.4 per cent compared to the previous Euro-election.

Due to its declining fortunes at previous elections, the FDP was especially concerned about its 'survival' and decided to pursue a pro-European approach. However, due to the need to renew its internal organization, after Hans-Dietrich Genscher stepped down, it was unable to focus on the election and attract enough votes to gain representation in Strasbourg. Regarding the election as a mere electoral test, the SPD resorted to some posters – 'The Mafia in Europe must be shattered!' or 'Security instead of fear!' – that emphasized topics that were discussed at the European level (Paterson et al., 1996, 77). In spite of a promising outlook at the beginning of 1994, the SPD's performance was rather disappointing: it lost over 5 per cent of the vote gained in 1989, yet at 32.2 per cent of the vote, it registered the highest score amongst all the other political parties in this contest.

The Greens, who followed a critical approach to the Treaty of the European Union, particularly in relation to the democratic process, the environment, trade, and environment policy, obtained 10.1 per cent of the vote, 1.7 points more than in the previous Euro-elections, thus securing 12 seats (Paterson et al., 1996, 75–6). The reformist Communist PDS, unable to become a party with representation in the western regions of Germany, had difficulty gaining a seat at the national and European levels. The PDS supported a supranational European Union, which would offer more protection to workers through the reinforcement of European social policy.

The 1999 European Parliament election took place nine months after the setting up of an SPD/Green coalition government led by Chancellor Gerhard Schröder. Although still in their honeymoon period, the government parties did not perform well at the Euro-elections. Tensions and disagreements between the coalition partners over the Kosovo War, as well as social policy issues, contributed to undermine the image of the executive. In the end, the EP contest became an opportunity for the citizens to protest against the direction of the red-green coalition.

Overall, parties devoted less attention to the international dimension in their electoral programmes. The three traditional parties, the CDU, SPD, and FDP, emphasized both economic and foreign policy issues, whilst the smaller parties revealed a different profile in this matter. In particular, whereas the CSU highlighted international cooperation as well as the role of the regions in the EU, the Greens stressed the question of the environment and the position of women in society; the PDS underlined issues related to social justice; and the Republikaner called for law and order, emphasizing the importance of political leadership (Binder and Wüst, 2004, 42–3).

The 1999 Euro-election led to the victory of the CDU and CSU, with their 39.3 per cent and 9.4 per cent of vote, respectively, as well as to the defeat of the SPD and, in particular, the Greens with their 30.7 per cent and 6.4 per cent, respectively. The electoral results also sanctioned the PDS' first entry to the Strasbourg arena, whilst confirming the FDP's exclusion.

Being held one-and-a-half years after the federal general elections, the 2004 European elections could be regarded as 'mid-term'. The CDU/CSU used the European Parliament electoral race to criticize the red-green government. National issues dominated the campaign, especially the mismanagement of tax and labour market reform (Niedermayer, 2005, 56). The CDU remained loyal to its main slogan of being the European party in Germany and developing a party manifesto that was close to that of the EPP. The CSU particularly emphasized the 'Europe of the regions' theme by using the slogan 'For a strong Bavaria in Europe' (Für ein starkes Bayern in Europa).

For the FDP, under Guido Westerwelle's new leadership, it was crucial to perform well in the European elections. Silvana Koch-Mehrin became the head of the list and was instrumental in changing the image of the FDP. Her dynamism was fundamental in attracting younger voters. The party manifesto, 'Wir können Europa besser! Für ein freies und besseres Europa' ('We can do Europe better! For a free and fair Europe'), contained a more optimistic and constructive approach of the FDP. The PDS developed a manifesto entitled 'Alternativen sind machbar: Für ein soziales, demokratisches und friedliches Europa' ('Alternatives are possible: For a social, democratic and peaceful Europe'), whereby it presented itself as an alternative to the more established political parties (Niedermayer, 2005, 46–7).

Whilst the CDU, CSU, and SPD concentrated their campaigns on national issues, smaller parties conducted a campaign about European issues. The results of the 2004 elections led to the success of the CDU and CSU, with their respective 36.5 per cent and 8 per cent of the vote, against the government parties. The SPD faced its worse defeat in the history of Euro-elections by receiving only 21.5 per cent of vote. On the contrary, the Green Party and the FDP almost doubled their respective scores compared to the previous EU contest. Accordingly, the former succeeded in sending 13 members to Strasbourg, six more than in 1999, whilst the latter, with its seven members, finally achieved representation in the European Parliament again.

In sum, the German political parties did not invest very much in the EP contests, but rather attempted to make a profit out of the generous public funding system. Electoral manifestos did not change to a great extent over the years, whilst the vast majority of citizens did not appear very interested in such elections.

9 The 2009 European elections

9.1 Party lists and manifestos

Overall, 32 political parties ran in the 2009 EP electoral race which was strongly dominated by the impact of the financial crisis triggered by the collapse of Lehman Brothers and the real estate market in the United States. In spite of the lack of a genuine discussion about European issues, most German parties being supportive of the European integration process, one of the most aggressive campaigns occurred, mainly due to the narrow window between the European Parliament and German general elections scheduled for September 2009.

In line with the manifesto of the Party of European Socialists (PES), the SPD programme was entitled 'For Europe: strong and social' ('Für Europa: stark und sozial!') clearly stressing the need to reinforce a social Europe against the financial crisis caused by the banking sector (Sozialdemokratische Partei Deutschlands, 2009). Great emphasis was put on an enhanced employment policy, achieved by an infrastructure programme financed by the European Union, and on investments in the field of education, research, and vocational training. The Social Democrats advocated a coordination of social policy at the European level rather than the harmonization of social policy, because of national differences. The SPD called for a change of the financial architecture by reinforcing regulatory and control institutions. It also urged the setting up of a credit line for small and medium-sized enterprises, so that business across the EU could be supported especially during the financial crisis. Immigration was regarded as positive; however, the Social Democrats advocated an integrated approach that involved the cooperation of migrants' countries of origin. (Sozialdemokratische Partei Deutschlands, 2009, 12).

The Euro-manifesto of the CDU, entitled 'Strong Europe-Secure Future' ('Starkes Europa-Sichere Zukunft'), aimed at strengthening and securing the social market economy in Germany and the European Union (Christlich Demokratische Union, 2009, 4). It spelt out the party opposition to the harmonization of social policy in Europe, as this would contribute to a damping down of the generous and strong German welfare state. The manifesto emphasized particularly the need to improve the EU economic competitiveness by adopting the successful German export-oriented model and calling for a new financial architecture to protect particularly small investors and stakeholders. The new Freedom and Security Space introduced under the Schengen Treaty put in evidence the need to strengthen judicial cooperation (Christlich Demokratische Union, 2009, 10–12).

Amongst the four smaller political parties, the CSU was the most conservative. It raised the importance of a 'Europe of regions' in accordance with the principle of subsidiarity. Its identity as a Christian-Democratic party became clear throughout the document in which references to family and religious values were included. The Euro-manifesto also emphasized the importance of parliamentary participation in the EU decision-making process (Christlich-Soziale Union, 2009). The CSU Euro-manifesto devoted great space to agricultural issues, calling for the devolution of agricultural competences to the regional level.

Whilst the SPD, CDU, and CSU produced relatively short manifestos, the FDP, Die Linke and the Greens drafted lengthy and detailed documents to present their policy proposals. The Liberal Party's Euro-manifesto entitled 'Freedom in Europe in the World of the Twenty-first Century' ('Freiheit in Europa in der Welt des 21. Jahrhunderts') used several catchwords, 'freedom', 'subsidiarity', 'competitiveness', and 'responsibility', to attract the electorate. The Liberal Party, albeit strongly pro-European, regarded the need to set limits to the European Union, and in particular a cap on the budget. The Euro-manifesto claimed that the European Union had enough financial resources that were not used efficiently. In particular, funding for the CAP and for the structural funds could be reduced in order to finance other more future-oriented policies (Freie Demokratische Partei, 2009). Another element that was sketched out in the manifesto was the reduction of an overwhelming bureaucracy in the EU. The liberalization of markets through the reduction of red tape was also a major theme amongst the Liberals. The FDP stated that it wanted to bring more market to the European economy and cut back on those subsidies distorting competition. Finally, innovation and education were the two key aspects capable of preserving competitiveness worldwide. Like the SPD and CDU, the FDP also rejected a harmonization of social policy due to the differences between the various countries (Freie Demokratische Partei, 2009).

At the beginning of 2009, the German Greens launched their 170-page manifesto, entitled ‘Volles Programm mit WUMS. Für ein besseres Europa!’ (‘Full programme with WUMS. For a better Europe’) with Rebecca Harms and Reinhard Bütikofer at the top of the electoral list (Bündnis 90/Die Grünen, 2009, 16). In their view, Europe was a ‘matter of the heart’ and should not be allowed to become a project of the elite. The core message of the Green Party was what they labelled the ‘New Green Deal for Europe’, which aimed at restructuring the European economy towards sustainable green technologies, including following principles of social justice between the Northern and Southern Hemispheres. According to the Greens, climate change policy was interlinked with all other policies such as energy, transport, economy, as well as foreign and development policy. The Green Party supported the Treaty of Lisbon; however, it regarded it as a transition towards a slimmed down constitution (Bündnis 90/Die Grünen, 2009, 3).

The Greens were very close both to the SPD and the Left Party in their conception of ‘social Europe’. The protection of the working population and solidarity with less developed regions were emphasized. Moreover, the Euro-manifesto stressed the need to decentralize possible public services as much as possible in order to provide an optimal delivery to citizens. An open and welcoming Europe for minorities, particularly Roma, as well as migrants was strenuously advocated. Internationally, the EU should be engaged in reforming international institutions and contribute to the development of world peace (Bündnis 90/Die Grünen, 2009).

Die Linke was the only party that put forward what could be defined as ‘transformative Euro-criticism’, reflecting a constructive approach towards a new direction to the EU, rather than an attitude of rejection of the European project (Harmsen, 2007, 208–12). Its Euro-manifesto, entitled ‘Solidarität, Demokratie und Frieden-Gemeinsam für den Wechsel in Europa’ (‘Solidarity, Democracy and Peace-Together for Change in Europe’) condemned EU neo-liberal and capitalist policies by calling for an increase in funding in favour of weaker economies and by promoting more radical legislation in order to prevent the recurrence of the dramatic events that led to the breakdown of the financial sector (Die Linke, 2009).

Under Oskar Lafontaine’s leadership, Die Linke was the only German party to oppose the ratification of the Lisbon Treaty since it perpetuated a policy of liberalization reducing the rights of workers across Europe and allowed for the further militarization of EU foreign and security policy. Last but not least, the treaty was unfavourable as it was conceived through a top-down process without consulting the population by way of a referendum (Die Linke, 2009, 1–3, 23).

Besides the six parliamentary parties, another 26 lists took part in the elections, including two extreme right-wing parties, two extreme left-wing parties, three Christian-Conservative parties, two ecological movements, three pensioners’ parties, three single-issue parties, and even eight citizens’ lists, clearly revealing increasingly popular anti-party feelings (Saalfeld, 2005, 49–54).

The far right-wing DVU and Die Republikaner expressed their opposition to the EU’s centripetal tendencies and to Turkey’s prospective membership. Finally, the Christian ‘Partei für Arbeit, Umwelt und Familie’, AUF (Party for Labour, Environment and Family) ran the electoral race as the German representative of the transnational movement ‘Libertas’, financed by the Irish Tycoon Declan Ganley, but failed in the end to get representation in Strasbourg (Euractiv.com, 8 June 2009).

Table 5.5 Euromanifestos of non-parliamentary parties

| Ideological origins | Political party | Main campaign points |
|--------------------------------|--|---|
| Transnational European parties | Europa-Demokratie-Esperanto – EIDE (Europe–Democracy–Esperanto) | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Democratization of EU • Introduction of Esperanto as main working language in EU • European government • reinforced European integration • Anti-party movement • Direct democracy • Local democracy |
| Citizens' groups | New Europeans Das Generationen-Bündnis – 50 plus (50 Plus–Alliance of Generations) Bündnis Für Deutschland, Für Demokratie Durch Volksabstimmung – Ab Jetzt (Volksabstimmung) (From Now) Freie Wähler – FW (Free Voters) Gerechtigkeit Braucht Bürgerrechte–Wir Danken Für Ihr Vertrauen! – Für Volksentscheide (Wählergemeinschaft): (For People's Decision–Making [Voters' Community]. Justice Needs Citizens' Rights – Thanks for your Trust!) Bürgerrechtsbewegung Solidarität – BÜSO (Civic Rights Movement Solidarity) Freie Bürger Initiative – FBI (Free Citizens' Initiative) Aufbruch Für Bürgerrechte, Freiheit Und Gesundheit – Aufbruch (New Beginning for Civil Rights, Freedom and Health) | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Choice in the health sector • Critical of health sector being dominated by economic interests in Germany and European Union • Regionalist issues • Independence of Bavaria • Against centralistic tendencies in EU • Spiritual dimension of politics • Non-violent, holistic policies • humanistic ideology • No clear message about Europe; very abstract • Support for family friendly policies in Germany and at EU level • Equality between men and women (gender mainstreaming) • More women in top positions of EU • Non-violent approach to politics • Against censorship on the internet • Against patents and copyright as major obstacle to knowledge society |
| Single-issue parties | Bayernpartei – BP (Bavaria Party) Die Violetten: Für Spirituelle Politik–Die Violetten (The Violets-for Spiritual Policy) Familienpartei Deutschlands – Familie (Family Party Of Germany) Feministische Partei–Die Frauen–Die Frauen – (Feminist Party–The Women) Piratenpartei Deutschlands – Piraten (Pirate Party Of Germany) | |

(continued)

Table 5.5 (continued)

| Ideological origins | Political party | Main campaign points |
|--------------------------------|--|--|
| Pensioners' parties | Die Grauen-Generationspartei-Die Grauen (The Grays-Generation Party) | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Better welfare conditions for pensioners • Better pensions for pensioners |
| Extreme right-wing parties | Rentnerinnen Und Rentner Partei – RRP (Female and Male Pensioners' Party) Rentner Partei Deutschlands – Rentner (Pensioners' Party Of Germany) Deutsche Volksunion – DVU (German People's Union) Die Republikaner – REP (Republican Party/Republicans) | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Against the European Union for 'Europe of fatherlands' • Against membership of Turkey • For a Christian defined European Union • For 'Europe of fatherlands' • Against membership of Turkey • Against Europe of monopoly capitalism • Against capitalist Europe • For a United Europe of Socialist states • Against capitalist European Union • For subsidiarity and decentralization in EU • Christian values should be enshrined in treaties • Against abortion |
| Extreme left-wing parties | Deutsche Kommunistische Partei – DKP (German Communist Party) | |
| Christian-Conservative parties | Partei Der Sozialen Gleichheit-Sektion Der Vierten Internationale – PSG (Party of Social Equality-Section of the Fourth International) Partei Für Arbeit, Umwelt Und Familie-Christen Für Deutschland – AUF (Party for Labour, Environment, and Family, Christians for Germany) Partei Bibeltreuer Christen – PBC (Party of Bible-Abiding Christians) Christliche Mitte: Für Ein Deutschland Nach Gottes Geboten – GM (Christian Centre: for a Germany According to God's Commandments) Mensch-Umwelt-Tierschutz – MUT (Man, Environment, and Animal Protection) | |
| Ecological parties | Ökologisch-Demokratische Partei – ÖDP (Ecological Democratic Party) | <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Not specific about European Union • General statements about holistic integration of environment and animal protection in overall life-style of man |

Sources: Authors' table Based on Data from Europa-Demokratie-Esperanto (2009); New Europeans (2009); 50plus – Das Generationen-Bündnis (2009); Ab Jetzt Bündnis Für Deutschland, Für Demokratie Durch Volksabstimmung (2009); Freie Wähler (2009); Für Volksentscheide (2009); Bürgerrechtsbewegung Solidarität (2009); Freie Bürger Initiative (2009); Aufbruch Für Bürgerrechte, Freiheit Und Gesundheit (2009); Bayernpartei (2009); Die Violette (2009); Familienpartei Deutschlands (2009); Feministische Partei-Die Frauen (2009); Platenpartei Deutschlands (2009); Die Grauen-Generationspartei (2009); Rentnerinnen Und Rentner Partei (2009); Rentner Partei Deutschlands (2009); Deutsche Volksunion (2009); Die Republikaner (2009); Deutsche Kommunistische Partei (2009); Partei Der Sozialen Gleichheit (2009); Partei Für Arbeit, Umwelt Und Familie-Christen Für Deutschland (2009); Partei Bibeltreuer Christen (2009); Christliche Mitte (2009), Mensch-Umwelt-Tierschutz (2009); Ökologisch-Demokratische Partei (2009).

9.2 Electoral campaign

The European Parliament's offices in Berlin and Munich launched a campaign to mobilize voters to go to the polls, reminding them that if they did not cast their ballot, others would decide for them. The campaign 'European elections 2009-Your decision' was coordinated with all the other 26 countries of the European Union. In particular, the European Parliament, which was very keen to attract young voters, even resorted to social networks such as Facebook and YouTube in order to reach them (Gagatek et al., 2009).

Given that there was no official opening of electoral campaigns in Germany, the process started with European conferences organized by the various political parties. The SPD was the first to convene such a meeting on 8 December 2008, thus nominating Martin Schulz, Chairman of the Socialist Group in the European Parliament as Spitzenkandidat. The SPD appeared split between a right-centre wing around its leader Franz Müntefering and a left wing around other chief members, Kurt Beck and Sigmar Gabriel. The main dividing position was over labour market legislation known as the 'Hartz IV' reform, introduced by the Schröder government and implemented between 2002 and 2005.

There was widespread fear amongst the Social Democrats that such internal disagreement would seriously damage the party and affect its electoral outcome. The European party conference was characterized by a half-empty hall in Berlin (Süddeutsche Zeitung, 8 December 2008) grounded on the common feeling that the SPD was losing out as a junior partner in the Grand Coalition. Moreover, Vice-Chancellor Frank-Walter Steinmeier was not regarded as a charismatic personality capable of taking the party forward. On 11 March 2009, the CDU organized its Europakongress to present its programme, which mainly focussed on economic issues related to the financial crisis urging the adoption of the German model of social market economy at the European and global levels. European Parliament President Hans-Gert Pöttering campaigned under the motto 'Für Schutz durch Gemeinschaft: Wir in Europa' ('For protection through the community: We in Europe') whilst Chancellor Merkel featured as a pillar of stability and trustworthiness in television spots (Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung, 17 March 2009).

At the European conference held on 8 May 2009, the CSU, faced with domestic problems in Bavaria and concerned about the constant low turnout at the EP elections, called for the unity of the party in order to gather sufficient consensus and exceed the 5 per cent threshold at the forthcoming Euro-elections (Die Welt, 9 May 2009a). The CSU ran its campaign under the slogan 'Für ein Europa der Werte' ('For a Europe of values'), thus distancing itself programmatically from the CDU (Christlich-Soziale Union, 2009). After Edmund Stoiber's resignation, the party kept a dual leadership with the Prime Minister of the Regional Government, Günther Beckstein, and Party Chairman Erwin Huber. However, in September 2008, the CSU won the regional elections, yet dropped from an absolute majority of 60 per cent to a relative one of 43.3 per cent. Horst Seehofer, who became the new Leader and Regional Prime Minister, had therefore the difficult task of preparing and relaunching the party for the elections to the European Parliament.

As to the FDP, the new young and dynamic head of list Silvana Koch-Mehrin, whose smiling face graced numerous posters, contributed to the upward trend of the party through an intense campaign that focussed on 'the EU as a success story' (Freie Demokratische Partei, 2009). The European party conference held on 17 January 2009 was quite pragmatic and dominated by domestic questions, such as Guido Westerwelle's official announcement that the FDP would support the grand coalition government, whilst European issues were sidelined (Freie Demokratische Partei, 2009).

The Greens ran an optimistic and self-confident campaign based on their 'New Green Deal' socio-economic plan. Probably the most divided European party conference was that of Die

Linke. Almost all eight members of the European Parliament elected in 2004 were deselected in the European party conference in Essen on 1 March 2009. A radicalization of the party took place, in which an anti-capitalist position and a total rejection of the Lisbon Treaty were approved. The overall approach was not only directed against the liberal policies of the Barroso Commission, but also against the CDU/CSU/SPD coalition. The financial crisis was regarded as a favourable background to exercise strategic opposition against the policies of the German government (Der Spiegel, 27 February 2009a). Two incumbent MEPs, Sylvia-Yvonne Kaufmann and André Brie were excluded from the list, presumably for their positions regarding human rights abuses in Cuba and, in the latter's case, for her support for the Lisbon Treaty, against the official party line (Die Zeit, 26 February 2009a; Der Spiegel, 14 May 2009b). The main candidate became one of the co-founders and long-standing leader, Lothar Bisky.

The CDU campaign started in mid-April 2009 with a series of slogans related to the importance of the European Union for Germany. One of its characteristics was the lack of personalization of the campaign around its chief candidate Hans-Gert Pöttering (Der Spiegel, 16 March 2009c; CDU.TV, 2009). This was done on purpose, given that he was hardly known at the national level even if he was at the head of the European Parliament in the previous legislature between January 2007 and June 2009 (Viola, 2010). By contrast, Chancellor Merkel featured as a key element in electoral posters and videos.

The SPD carried out an aggressive campaign against virtually all other political parties, by producing a series of provocative posters, such as 'Hot air would vote for Die Linke', 'Finance sharks vote for the FDP', and 'Wage dumpers vote for the CDU', referring to the reluctance of the Chancellor's party to adopt a national minimum wage (Die Welt, 29 May 2009b). Only the Green Party was spared from CDU attacks. This was interpreted as a strategic move beyond the European elections, geared towards a potential federal government coalition (Die Zeit, 13 June 2009b). The main Socialist candidate Martin Schulz was almost invisible in the Euro-campaign (Die Zeit, 4 May 2009c).

Unlike the other German parliamentary parties, the FDP centred its campaign on chief candidate Silvana Koch-Mehrin, who called herself a 'Eurofighter' in her own blog. The campaign was also combined with other local, regional, and general election campaigns. The Green Party used its detailed programme 'New Green Deal' to target issues that were common to the European Union and Germany. The slogan 'WUMS for a better Europe' was employed in all posters along with themes against nuclear energy, genetically modified food, and economic and social injustice (Bündnis 90/Die Grünen, 2009). Finally, Die Linke's campaign was rather populist, with radical slogans in its posters and television spots against the bank bailouts by the German and other governments across Europe, such as 'Millionaires to the till' and 'Europe-wide minimum wage'.

In sum, the campaign was dominated by national issues, which were, however, connected to the European level. The lacklustre campaign was just a rehearsal for the more important general elections on 27 September 2009.

9.3 Electoral results

At the 2009 EP contest in Germany, turnout reached its lowest level of 43.3 per cent. The ruling CDU obtained 30.7 per cent of the votes cast and 34 seats, thus losing 5.9 percentage points and six seats. Its sister party, the CSU, also registered a slight decline of 0.8 per cent, reducing its representation in Strasbourg to seven members. Yet, the big loser in the Euro-elections was the CDU/CSU junior government partner, the SPD, which achieved its worst record of 20.8 per cent of the vote, yet kept the same number of 23 seats as before. By contrast, the Green Party was able to improve by 0.2 percentage points and one seat compared to the 2004 electoral score by achieving 12.1 per cent and 14 seats. This confirmed the Greens as the third strongest political force after the Christian Democrats and the Social Democrats.

Germany

However, the most spectacular rise was registered by the FDP, which almost doubled its electoral share from 6.1 per cent to 11 per cent, and went from seven to 12 seats. This was certainly due to the dynamic and vibrant campaign undertaken by its head of list, Silvana Koch-Mehrin. Die Linke's electoral outcome increased from 6.1 per cent to 7.5 per cent, thus assigning the party eight seats in the European Parliament, one more than in 2004.

Table 5.6 EP election results in Germany: 2009

| Political Parties | % | Seats |
|---|------------|-------|
| Christlich Demokratische Union Deutschlands – CDU | 30.7 | 34 |
| Sozialdemokratische Partei Deutschlands – SPD | 20.8 | 23 |
| Bündnis 90/Die Grünen, Grüne | 12.1 | 14 |
| Freie Demokratische Partei – FDP | 11.0 | 12 |
| Die Linke | 7.2 | 8 |
| Christlich-Soziale Union In Bayern – CSU | 7.2 | 8 |
| Freie Wähler – FW | 1.7 | — |
| Die Republikaner – REP | 1.3 | — |
| Mensch-Umwelt-Tierschutz – MUT | 1.1 | — |
| Familien-Partei Deutschlands Familie | 1.0 | — |
| Piratenpartei Deutschland Piraten | 0.9 | — |
| Rentner Partei Deutschlands – RENTNER | 0.8 | — |
| Ökologisch-Demokratische Partei – ÖDP | 0.5 | — |
| Deutsche Volksunion – DVU | 0.4 | — |
| Rentnerinnen Und Rentner Partei – RPP | 0.4 | — |
| Feministische Partei-Die Frauen Die – FRAUEN | 0.3 | — |
| Partei Bibeltreuer Christen – PBC | 0.3 | — |
| Bündnis Für Deutschland, Für Demokratie Durch Volksabstimmung Ab Jetzt (Volksabstimmung) | 0.3 | — |
| Das Generationen-Bündnis 50Plus | 0.3 | — |
| Die GRAUEN-Generationspartei DIE GRAUEN | 0.2 | — |
| Bayernpartei – BP | 0.2 | — |
| Die Violetten: Für Spirituelle Politik – DIE VIOLETTEN | 0.2 | — |
| (Wählergemeinschaft): Gerechtigkeit Braucht Bürgerrechte – Wir Danken | 0.2 | — |
| Für Ihr Vertrauen! FÜR VOLKSENTSCHEIDE | 0.2 | — |
| Christliche Mitte: Für Ein Deutschland Nach Gottes Geboten – CM | 0.2 | — |
| Partei Für Arbeit, Umwelt Und Familie-Christen Für Deutschland – AUF | 0.1 | — |
| Aufbruch Für Bürgerrechte, Freiheit Und Gesundheit – AUFBRUCH | 0.1 | — |
| Freie Bürger Initiative – FBI | 0.1 | — |
| Deutsche Kommunistische Partei – DKP | 0.1 | — |
| Newropeans | 0.1 | — |
| Europa-Demokratie-Esperanto – EDE | 0.04 | — |
| Bürgerrechtsbewegung Solidarität – Büso | 0.04 | — |
| Partei Der Sozialen Gleichheit-Sektion Der Vierten Internationale – PSG | 0.035 | — |
| Total | 100 | |

Source: Bundeswahlleiter (2009) www.Bundeswahlleiter.De/De/Europawahlen/.

Table 5.7 The German MEPs' affiliation to the European parliamentary groups

| Political Party | % | Seats | EPP | S&D | ALDE | Greens/EFA | ECR | EUL/NGL | EFD | NA |
|-----------------------|------|-------|-----|-----|------|------------|-----|---------|-----|----|
| CDU | 30.7 | 42 | 42 | — | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| SPD | 20.8 | 23 | — | 23 | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Bündnis 90/Die Grünen | 12.1 | 14 | — | — | — | 14 | — | — | — | — |
| FDP | 11 | 12 | — | — | 12 | — | — | — | — | — |
| Die Linke | 7.5 | 8 | — | — | — | — | — | 8 | — | — |
| CSU | 7.2 | 9 | 9 | — | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Others | 10.7 | 0 | — | — | — | — | — | — | — | — |
| Total | 100 | 108 | 51 | 23 | 12 | 14 | — | 8 | — | — |

Source: European Parliament website: www.europarl.eu.

The remaining 26 parties failed to achieve representation, as they together attained a mere 10.8 per cent of the vote, with seven of them scoring more than 0.5 per cent and four over one per cent, notably the citizens' list Freie Wähler (FW) with 1.7 per cent, the Republikaner with 1.3 per cent, the Tierschutzpartei with 1.1 per cent and the Familienpartei with one per cent (Bundeswahlleiter, 2009).

9.4 Campaign finance

Germany boasts a generous public party financing system, which clearly shows the tendency towards a cartelization of politics and the institutionalization of a party state (Katz and Mair, 1995). For the first four million voters, a party gets €0.85, afterwards €0.70. The main condition is that the party achieves at least 0.5 per cent of the vote. Moreover, the parties get an additional €0.38 for each euro donated or each euro membership fee paid every year. The annual ceiling for public party financing is €133 million and payment is undertaken after the submission of an accountability report on 1 December of each year (Korte, 2009).

The costs of the 2009 EP campaign amounted to €10 million for the CDU, €9 million for the SPD, €1.4 million for the FDP, €1 million for the Greens, and about €3.4 million for Die Linke (Landeszentrale für politische Bildung Baden-Württemberg, 2009).

German political parties invested less funding in European elections – a large part coming from the public purse – in comparison to federal elections. All parties, except the Left Party and the CSU, devoted about half of the resources they would employ in federal elections. As shown in Figure 5.3, in the case of the SPD three times less funding was disbursed at Euro-elections.

Since 1979 a declining spending trend has been detected over Euro-campaigning in order to make a profit out of the generous public funding system. Figure 5.3 shows that similar costs were registered at the EP and national elections held in 1983 and 1984, yet over time a difference emerged. On average, in Euro-elections, the parliamentary parties disbursed just one-third of what they would normally have disbursed at general elections. Finally, parties did not resort to external marketing agencies in order to organize their Euro-campaigns and considerably reduced the costs of consulting experts (Niedermayer, 2005, 47–50).

10 Theoretical interpretation of Euro-elections

10.1 Second-Order Election theory

The German case seems to validate the hypothesis of the Second-Order Election theory relating to the lower participation of citizens in EP elections in comparison with federal general elections, even if this aspect did not become more prominent in 2009.

Table 5.8 List of German MEPs: seventh legislature

| Name | National party | Political group | Professional background | Year of birth | Gender | Committee chairs |
|------------------------------|-----------------------|------------------------|-------------------------------------|----------------------|---------------|--|
| Balz, Burkhard | CDU | EPP | Banking salesmen | 1969 | Male | |
| Böge, Reimer | | | Farmer Agronomy engineer | 1951 | Male | |
| Brok, Elmar | | | Journalist, professional politician | 1946 | Male | Delegation relations with USA |
| Caspary, Daniel | | | Economist | 1976 | Male | |
| Ehler, Christian | | | Manager | 1963 | Male | Delegation relations with Korean peninsula |
| Ferber, Markus | | | Engineer | 1965 | Male | |
| Florenz, Karl-Heinz | | | Salesman | 1947 | Male | |
| Gahler, Michael | | | Diplomat | 1960 | Male | Delegation Panafrican Parliament |
| Gräßle, Inge | | | Journalist | 1961 | Female | |
| Jahr, Dieter Peter | | | Economist | 1959 | Male | |
| Elisabeth, Jeggle | | | Farmer | 1947 | Female | |
| Klaß, Christa | | | Rural enterprise manager | 1951 | Female | |
| Koch, Dieter Lebrecht | | | Architect | 1953 | Male | |
| Kuhn, Werner | | | Entrepreneur | 1941 | Male | |
| Langen, Werner | | | Economist | 1949 | Male | Delegation for relations with the countries of Southeast Asia and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) |
| Lechner, Kurt | | | Notary | 1942 | Male | |
| Lehne, Klaus Heiner | | | Lawyer | 1957 | Male | Conference of Committee Chairs and Committee on Legal Affairs |
| Liese, Peter | | | Physician | 1965 | Male | |
| Mann, Thomas | | | Industrial salesman | 1946 | Male | |
| Mayer, Hans-Peter | | | Lawyer | 1944 | Male | |
| Pack, Doris | | | Local councillor | 1942 | Female | Culture and education |
| Pieper, Markus | | | Manager | 1963 | Male | Vice-president regional development |
| Pöttering, Hans-Gert | | | Lawyer | 1945 | Male | |
| Quisthoudt-Rowohl, Godelieve | | | Chemist | 1947 | Female | |
| Reul, Herbert | | | School teacher | 1957 | Male | Industry, research, and energy |

(continued)

Table 5.8 (continued)

| Name | National party | Political group | Professional background | Year of birth | Gender | Committee chairs |
|---------------------------|----------------|-----------------|--|---------------|--------|---|
| Schnellhard, Horst | | | Veterinarian | 1946 | Male | |
| Schnieber-jastram, Birgit | | | Publishing house editor | 1946 | Female | |
| Schwab, Andreas | | | Civil servant | 1973 | Male | |
| Sommer, Renate | | | Agricultural engineer | 1958 | Female | |
| Ullner, Thomas | | | Physician | 1956 | Male | |
| Verheyen, Sabine | | | Local councillor, Mayor of Aachen | 1964 | Female | |
| Voss, Axel | | | Lawyer | 1963 | Male | |
| Wieland, Rainer | | | Lawyer | 1957 | Male | |
| Winkler, Herman | | | Engineer, local Councillor | 1963 | Male | |
| Zeller, Joachim | | | Librarian | 1952 | Male | |
| Deß, Albert | CSU | | Farmer | 1947 | Male | |
| Ferber, Markus | | | Engineer | 1965 | Male | |
| Hohlmeier, Monika | | | Hotelier | 1962 | Female | |
| Kastler, Martin | | | Journalist | 1974 | Male | |
| Niebler, Angelika | | | Lawyer | 1963 | Female | Delegation of relations with Arabic peninsula |
| Posselt, Bernd | | | Journalist | 1956 | Male | |
| Weber, Manfred | | | Engineer | 1972 | Male | |
| Weisgerber, Anja | | | Professional politician | 1976 | Female | |
| Bullmann, Udo | SPD | S&D | University Lecturer | 1956 | Male | |
| Ertug, Ismail | | | Health Insurance Consultant, Local Councillor | 1975 | Male | |
| Fleckenstein, Knut | | | Manager | 1953 | Male | Delegation EU-Russian Parliamentary Cooperation Committee |
| Gebhardt, Evelyne | | | Lecturer | 1954 | Male | |
| Geier, Jens | | | Party functionary | 1961 | Male | |
| Glante, Norbert | | | Electronic engineer | 1952 | Male | Vice-president of Delegation to the Euro-Latin American Parliamentary Assembly |
| Groote, Matthias | | | Industrial engineer | 1973 | Male | |

| | | | | |
|---------------------------|---|------|--------|---|
| Haug, Jutta | Local councillor, Professional politician | 1951 | Female | Special Committee on the Policy Challenges and Budgetary Resources for a Sustainable European Union after 2013 Vice-president budgets |
| Kammerevert, Petra | Professional politician | 1966 | Female | |
| Krehl, Constanze Angela | IT specialist | 1956 | Female | |
| Kreissl-dorfler, Wolfgang | Farmer, qualified social science teacher | 1950 | Male | |
| Lange, Bernd | School teacher | 1955 | Male | |
| Leinen, Jo | Professional politician | 1948 | Male | Environment, public health and food safety |
| Neuser, Norbert | Head school teacher | 1949 | Male | |
| Rapkay, Bernhard | Public relations officer | 1951 | Male | |
| | Business administrator | 1949 | Female | |
| Rodust, Ulrike | Civil servant | 1953 | Female | Vice-president European Parliament |
| Roth-behrendt, Dagmar | Bookshop owner | 1955 | Male | |
| Schulz, Martin | Lawyer, civil servant | 1967 | Male | |
| Simon, Peter | Trade union officer | 1960 | Female | |
| Sippel, Birgit | Personnel manager | 1962 | Female | |
| Steinruck, Jutta | Industrial manager | 1946 | Female | |
| Weiler, Barbara | Nursery teacher | 1962 | Female | |
| Westphal, Kerstin | Student | 1982 | Male | |
| Albrecht, Jan Philip | | | | |
| | Greens/ European Free Alliance | | | |
| Brantner, Franziska | University lecturer | 1979 | Female | |
| Bütikofer, Reinhard | Professional politician | 1953 | Male | |
| Cramer, Michael | School teacher | 1949 | Male | |
| Giegold, Sven | Professional politician | 1969 | Male | |
| Hätner, Gerald | Journalist | 1956 | Male | Vice-president Delegation Korean peninsula |
| Harms, Rebecca | Landscape gardener | 1956 | Female | |
| Häusling, Martin | Farmer | 1961 | Male | |
| Keller, Franziska | Professional politician | 1981 | Female | |
| Lochbihler, Barbara | Social worker | 1959 | Female | Delegation with relations with Iran |
| Rühle, Heide | Psychologist | 1948 | Female | |
| Schroedter, Elisabeth | Business director | 1959 | Female | Vice-president Employment and social affairs |

(continued)

Table 5.8 (continued)

| Name | National party | Political group | Professional background | Year of birth | Gender | Committee chairs |
|----------------------------|----------------|-----------------|--------------------------|---------------|--------|---|
| Schulz, Werner | | | Engineer | 1950 | Male | Vice-president Delegation to the EU-Russia Parliamentary Cooperation Committee |
| Trüpel, Helga | | | Professional politician | 1958 | Female | Vice-President culture and education and Special Committee on the Policy Challenges and Budgetary Resources for a Sustainable European Union after 2013 |
| Alvaro, Alexander | FDP | ALDE | Banking salesman | 1975 | Male | Vice-president budget |
| Chatzimarkakis, Georgios | | | Civil servant, manager | 1966 | Male | Delegation to the EU-Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia Joint Parliamentary Committee |
| Creutzmann, Jürgen | | | Chartered accountant | 1945 | Male | |
| Hirsch, Nadja | | | Business mediator | 1978 | Female | |
| Klinz, Wolf | | | Business administrator | 1941 | Male | Special Committee on the Financial, Economic and Social Crisis |
| Koch-mehrin, Silvana | | | Business consultant | 1970 | Female | Vice-President European Parliament |
| Krahmer, Holger | | | Banking salesman | 1970 | Male | Vice-President delegation of relations with Arabic peninsula |
| Lambsdorff, Alexander Graf | | | Diplomat | 1966 | Male | |
| Meissner, Gesine | | | Communication instructor | 1952 | Female | |
| Reimers, Britta | | | Farmer | 1971 | Female | |
| Thein, Alexandra | | | Lawyer | 1963 | Female | |
| Theurer, Michael | | | Newspaper editor | 1967 | Male | |
| Bisky, Lothar | Die Linke | EUL/NGL | University lecturer | 1941 | Male | Vice-president culture and education |
| Ernst, Cornelia | | | Instructor | 1956 | Female | Vice-President delegation of relations with Iran |
| Händel, Thomas | | | Electrician | 1953 | Male | |
| Klute, Jürgen | | | Pastor | 1953 | Male | |
| Lösing, Sabine | | | Social worker | 1955 | Female | |
| Scholz, Helmut | | | Diplomat | 1954 | Male | |
| Wils, Sabine | | | Midwife | 1959 | Female | |
| Zimmer, Gabriele | | | Translator | 1955 | Female | |

Source: European Parliament website: www.europarl.europa.eu/meps/en/search.html?country=DE

Figure 5.3 National and EP election campaign expenditure in Germany: 1984–2009

Source: Deutscher Bundestag 1984; 1985; 1988; 1990; 1992; 1995; 2000a; 2000b; 2004; 2006; 2007; Stuttgarter Nachrichten, 23 August 2005; Die Welt, 6 September 2009

A higher voting share of small and new political parties at the cost of the larger established parties was also corroborated (Treschel, 2009). In addition, the defeat of governing parties could be generally registered in Euro-elections. In particular in 2009, the most dramatic result was the loss of over 1.3 million voters by the CDU that went in a large part to the FDP (Infratest Dimap, 2009, 8; see also Treschel, 2009). The SPD's performance was even worse than in the 2004 European election and in the 2005 general election, which at the time was seen as an expression of protest against the government led by Chancellor Schröder and the so-called 'Agenda 2010'. The SPD did not manage to mobilize its former voters and had to face an all-time low in elections for the second time in a row.

The effects of the timing of the EP contest in the national electoral cycle could also be noticed. Euro-elections in Germany, held at the end of the electoral cycle starting in 2005, were quite a dress rehearsal for the subsequent general elections that took place on 27 September 2009. This meant that the results reached at the European elections were almost the same as those of the federal elections. The two largest parties were punished in the European elections, whilst the smaller parliamentary parties were able to improve their score.

However, the Second-Order Election theory cannot really explain the poor performance of the German Social-Democrats, the junior partner of the then coalition government, which had an even worse result than the abysmal one in 2004 and reiterated its low score in the general elections.

As Simon Hix has argued, the loss of the mainstream parties on the centre-left stemmed from their adoption of economic mainstays, such as high public spending, similar to those proposed by their political rivals. As a result, 'voters c[ould not] tell the difference between the centre-right and centre-left, and centre-right leaders in many countries look[ed] younger, fresher and more competent than centre-left leaders' (Hix, 2009, 5).

10.2 Europe Salience theory

Although 'Europe matters' in the German debates, overtly such questions were never likely to play a very prominent role in the agenda of political parties or in influencing voters' choices, with the exception of the FDP and the Greens. These parties, which actually put greater emphasis on the European Union in their manifestos, increased their voting share at the 2009 European election in relation to the 2005 legislative election. As a result, it could be argued that empirical evidence for the Europe Salience theory appears rather mixed.

Moreover, the hypothesis that anti-EU parties perform better in European elections could not be confirmed. In 2009, Die Linke, commonly regarded as the most German Eurosceptic party and long seen as likely to profit from the economic crisis due to its fierce criticism of the EU model, lost votes compared to the previous election. The two right-wing extremist parties which were strongly against the European integration project, the DVU and the Republikaner, failed to reach the nationwide five-per-cent threshold at the 2009 Euro-election.

Even if a more sceptical agenda for European integration has emerged (Harnisch and Schieder, 2006), there is no radical right-wing extremist party supporting a Eurosceptic agenda with a chance of being represented in the Bundestag or in the European Parliament in the short term (Lees, 2008). The most plausible working hypothesis to understand the German Euro-elections from the perspective of Europe Salience theory is that Green parties receive a greater increase in their vote share compared to other parties and in relation to previous national elections. The Greens represent a well-established party and are usually successful in European elections. German voters, concerned about environmental issues and aware of the importance of the European Parliament in the EU institutional framework, are likely to switch their vote to the Green party in a European election.

Over the years, whereas all political parties in Germany have been supportive of the European integration process, the population has become less pro-European. As a result, turnout in EP elections has been consistently lower than that at national elections. Overall, Germany seems to fit more in the Second-Order Election theory than in the Europe Salience model for the following reasons. Although European issues are raised at European Parliament elections, they are framed through national lenses. In addition, political parties spend less of their funding on such electoral contests and they even gain a profit out of the generous public funding system, in order to finance national elections that are considered to be far more important. Finally, political parties regard EP elections as a dress rehearsal for the forthcoming legislative elections. Against this background, it has to be pointed out that Euro-elections have become quite established in the multilevel governance electoral system in Germany, thus playing a crucial role as the trendsetter within the national electoral cycle.

References

Primary sources

- 50Plus-Das Generationenbündnis (2009) http:// 50plus-bund.de (accessed on 7 September 2010).
- Ab jetzt. Bündnis für Deutschland, für Demokratie durch Volksabstimmung (2009) <http://blog.demokratie-durch-volksabstimmung.de> (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- AUF – Arbeit, Umwelt, Familie-Christen für Deutschland (2009) www.auf-partei.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Bayern Partei (2010) www.bayernpartei.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Bundesamt für Statistik (2010) www.destatis.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Bundesverfassungsgericht (2008) Judgment of 3 July 2008 – 2 BvC 1/07, 2 BvC 7/07 – ‘Provisions of the Federal Electoral Act from which the effect of negative voting weight emerges unconstitutional’, www.bundesverfassungs-gericht.de/en/ (accessed on 28 August 2013).
- Bundesverfassungsgericht (2009) Urteil vom 30. Juni 2009: www.bundesverfassungsgericht.de/entscheidungen/es20090630_2bve000208.html (accessed on 28 February 2010).
- Bundesverfassungsgericht (2011) Judgment of 9 November 2011 – 2 BvC 4/10, 2 BvC 6/10, 2 BvC 8/10 – ‘Five per cent barrier clause in the law governing the in European elections held unconstitutional’, www.bundesverfassungs-gericht.de/en/ (accessed on 28 August 2013).
- Bundeswahlleiter (2009) Europawahl 2009. Ergebnisse in Deutschland. 30 Jahre Direktwahl des Europäischen Parlaments. Informationen des Bundeswahlleiters. Flyer. Wiesbaden, Büro des Bundeswahlleiters, www.bundeswahlleiter.de/de/europawahlen/EU_BUND_09/ergebnisse/faltblatt_ergebnisse_ew2009.pdf (accessed on 7 September 2010).
- Bundeszentrale für politische Bildung (2009) Wahlen 2009. Infoaktuell, www.bpb.de/publikationen/T6ALCB,0,Wahlen_2009.html (accessed on 7 September 2010).
- Bundeszentrale für politische Bildung (2012) Grundgesetz für die Bundesrepublik Deutschland. Bonn: Bundeszentrale für politische Bildung.
- Bündnis 90/Die Grünen (2009) Volles Programm mit WUMS für ein Besseres Europa. Berlin, Bündnis 90/Die Grünen.
- Bürgerrechtsbewegung Solidarität (2009) www.bueso.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- CDUtv(2009) www.youtube.com/cdutv?gl=DE&hl=de (accessed on 7 September 2010).
- Christlich-Demokratische Partei (CDU) (2009) Wir in Europa. Starkeres Europa – sichere Zukunft. Programm der Christlich-Demokratischen Partei zur Europawahl 2009, Berlin, CDU.
- Christliche Mitte (2009) Website, www.christliche-mitte.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Christlich-Soziale Partei (CSU) (2009) CSU-Europawahlprogramm 2009. Beschluss des CSU Parteiausschusses vom 9.Mai 2009, www.csu.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Demokratie-Esperanto (EDE) (2009) www.e-d-e.eu (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Deutscher Bundestag 1984; 1985; 1988; 1990; 1992; 1995; 2000a; 2000b; 2004; 2006; 2007; 2010. Campaign Expenditure for Federal and European Parliament elections, www.bundestag.de/bundestag/parteienfinanzierung/rechenschaftsberichte/rechenschaftsberichte/202446 (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Europa-Demokratie-Esperanto (EDE) (2009) www.e-d-e.eu (accessed on 4 September 2010).

- European Parliament website, www.europarl.europa.eu/parliament/archive/elections2009/en/index_en.html (accessed on 7 December 2013).
- Eurobarometer (2008) Europawahlen 2009, Spezialbarometer EBS 299, http://ec.europa.eu/public_opinion/archives/ebs/ebs_299_de.pdf (accessed on 10 January 2012).
- Eurostat (2012) <http://epp.eurostat.ec.europa.eu> (accessed on 29 August 2013).
- Familienpartei (2009) www.familienpartei.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Familienpartei (2009) www.familienpartei.de (accessed on 4 September 2010), German Politics, 16(4), 421–32.
- Federal Ministry of the Interior (2010) ‘National Minorities in Germany’, www.bmi.bund.de/SharedDocs/Downloads/EN/Broschueren/2010/nat_minderheiten.pdf?__blob=publicationFile (accessed 10 January 2012).
- Feministische Partei-Die Frauen (2009) Website, www.feministischepartei.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Fischer Weltalmanach (2009) Frankfurt, AM, Fischer Verlag.
- Forschungsgruppe Wahlen (2009) ‘Europawahl in Deutschland 2009’, www.forschungsgruppe.de/News/Euro09.pdf (accessed on 15 January 2012).
- Freie Bürger Initiative (FBI) (2009) www.fbi-europawahl.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Freie Demokratische Partei (FDP) (2009) Eine Europa der Freiheit für die Welt des 21. Jahrhunderts. Programm der Freien Demokratischen Partei für den Wahl zum VII. Europäischen Parlament 2009. Beschluss des Europaparteitags der FDP, Berlin, 17 Januar 2009, www.fdp.de (accessed on 3 September 2010).
- Freie Wähler (FW) (2009) <http://freie-waehler-deutschland.de> (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Für Volksentscheide (2009) www.fuervolksentscheide.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Infratest dimap (2009) Wahl zum Europäischen Parlament 7 Juni 2009, www.infratestdimap.de/uploads/media/EU_0906_Wahlreport_II_Leseprobe.pdf (accessed on 4 September 2009).
- Mensch-Umwelt-Tierschutz (2009) www.tierschutzpartei.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Newropeans (2009) www.newropeans.eu (accessed 4 September 2010).
- Ökologisch-demokratische Partei(ÖDP) www.oedp.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Partei Bibeltreuer Christen (PBC) (2009) www.pbc.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Partei der Sozialen Gleichheit (2009) www.gleichheit.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Piratenpartei (2009) www.piratenpartei.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Renterinnen und Rentner Partei (RRP) (2009) www.rrp-bund.de (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Rentner Partei Deutschlands (RPD) (2009) www.rentner-partei.com (accessed on 4 September 2010).
- Sozialdemokratische Partei Deutschlands (SPD) (2009) Europamanifest der Sozialdemokratischen Partei Deutschlands für den Wahl zum Europäischen Parlament 2009. Berlin, SPD.
- Sozialdemokratische Partei Europas (SPE) (2009) Der Mensch im Mittelpunkt: Eine neue Richtung für Europa, SPE-Manifest, Europawahlen Juni 2009, Brussels, SPE.
- Statistisches Bundesamt Deutschland (2013) Demografischer Wandel in Deutschland, Heft 1: Bevölkerungs- und Haushaltsentwicklung im Bund und in den Ländern, Wiesbaden: Statistisches Bundesamt, www.destatis.de (accessed on 28 August 2013).

Secondary sources

- Almond G. and Verba S. (1963) The Civic Culture. Political Attitudes and Democracy in Five Nations, Princeton, Princeton University Press.
- Anderson, J. J. and Goodman, John B. (1993) ‘Mars or Minerva? A United Germany in a Post-Cold War Europe’, in Keohane, Robert O. et al. (eds) After the Cold War. International Institutions and State Strategies in Europe, 1989–1991, Cambridge, MA, Harvard University Press, 23–62.
- Binder, T. and Wüst, A. M. (2004) ‘Inhalte der Europawahlprogramme deutscher Parteien 1979–1999’, Aus Politik und Zeitgeschichte, B17/2004, 38–45.
- Bulmahn, T., Fiebig, R. and Hilpert, C. (2010) Sicherheits- und verteidigungspolitisches Meinungsklima in der Bundesrepublik Deutschland. Ergebnisse der Bevölkerungsbefragung 2010 des Sozialwissenschaftlichen, Strausberg, Institut der Bundeswehr.
- Bulmer, S. and Paterson, W. E. (2010) ‘Germany and the European Union: From “tamed power” to normalized power?’ International Affairs, 86(5), 1051–73.
- Bulmer, S., Jeffery, C. and Padgett, S. (2010) ‘Democracy and Diplomacy, Germany and Europe’, in Bulmer, S. et al. (eds) Rethinking Germany and Europe. Democracy and Diplomacy in a Semi-Sovereign State, Basingstoke, Palgrave, 1–25.

- Bulmer, S., Jeffery, C. and Paterson, W. E. (1986) 'The Federal Republic of Germany', in Lodge, J. (ed.) Direct Elections to the European Parliament 1984, Basingstoke, Macmillan, 190–210.
- Bulmer, S., Jeffery, C. and Paterson, W. E. (2000) Germany's European Diplomacy: Shaping the Regional Milieu, Manchester, Manchester University Press.
- Clemens, G., Reinfeldt, A. and Wille, G. (2008) Geschichte der europäischen Integration, Paderborn, Ferdinand Schöningh/UTB.
- Die Linke (2009) 'Solidarität, Demokratie, Frieden – Gemeinsam für den Wechsel in Europa! Europawahlprogramm 2009 der Partei DIE LINKE'. Online. Available at: <http://die-linke.de> (accessed 29 August 2013).
- Die Welt (2009a) Seehofer warnt CSU vor weiteren Verlusten, 9 May. Online. Available at: www.welt.de/politik/article3708021/Seehofer-warnt-CSU-vor-weiteren-Verlusten.html (accessed on 29 August 2013).
- Die Welt (2009b) 'Was uns die Wahlwerbung über die Parteien sagt', 29 May. Online. Available at: www.welt.de/politik/article3829211/Was-uns-die-Wahlwerbung-ueber-die-Parteien-sagt.html (accessed on) 29 August 2013.
- Die Zeit (2009a) 'Rote Front gegen Europa', 26 February. Online. Available at: www.zeit.de/online/2009/09/linke-europa-lafontaine-brie (accessed on 29 August 2013).
- Die Zeit (2009b) 'SPD setzt auf sinnlose Polemik', 13 June. Online. Available at: www.zeit.de/online/2009/18/spd-wahlkampf (accessed on 29 August 2013).
- Die Zeit (2009c) 'Auf ihrem Europaparteitag schwört der Kanzlerkandidat die SPD auf Krise und Superwahljahr 2009 ein', 4 May. Online. Available at: www.zeit.de/online/2008/50/spd-krise-steinmeier (accessed on 29 August 2013).
- Der Spiegel (1989a) 'Schmierfinken und andere', 12 June. Online. Available at: <http://magazin.spiegel.de/EpubDelivery/spiegel/pdf/13493708> (accessed on 28 August 2013).
- Der Spiegel (1989b) 'Dröhnendes Geschwätz', 26 June. Online. Available at: <http://magazin.spiegel.de/EpubDelivery/spiegel/pdf/13507094> (accessed on 28 August 2013).
- Der Spiegel (1989c) 'Die EG liegt für die meisten eben weit ab', 12 June. Online. Available at: <http://magazin.spiegel.de/EpubDelivery/spiegel/pdf/13493930>, accessed on 28 August 2013.
- Der Spiegel (2009a) 'Überraschendes Strategiepapier: Steinmeier und Steinbrück wollen Finanzmärkte zähmen', 27 February. Online. Available at: www.spiegel.de/politik/deutschland/ueberraschendes-strategiepapier-steinmeier-und-steinbrueck-wollen-finanzmaerkte-zaeahmen-a-610370.html (accessed on 29 August 2013).
- Der Spiegel (2009b) 'Sektierer-Vorwurf: Linke EU-Abgeordnete Kaufmann wechselt zur SPD', 14 May. Online. Available at: www.spiegel.de/politik/deutschland/sektierer-vorwurf-linke-eu-abgeordnete-kaufmann-wechselt-zur-spd-a-624834.html (accessed on 29 August 2013).
- Der Spiegel (2009c) 'Europawahl: CDU kürt Pötering zum Spitzenkandidaten', 16 March. Online. Available at: www.spiegel.de/politik/deutschland/europawahl-cdu-kuert-poettering-zum-spitzenkandidaten-a-613594.html (accessed on 29 August 2013).
- Euractive (2009) 'Ist London eine Gefahr für Lissabon?', 8 June 2009, <http://www.euractiv.de/wahlen-und-macht/artikel/proeuropaische-parteien-der-mitte-unter-druck-001636> (accessed on 28 August 2013).
- Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung (2009) CDU spricht sich für weitere Amtszeit Barrosos aus – Präsidium verabschiedet Programm für Europawahl, 17 March, 4.
- Gagatek, W., Trechsel A. H. and Breuer, F. (2010) 'Bringing the European Parliament Election Results Closer to the Citizens', in Gagatsek, W. (ed.), The 2009 Elections to the European Parliament. Country Reports, Florence, European University Institute, xi–xiii.
- Harmsen, R. (2007) 'Euroscpticism', in Déloye Y. and Bruter M. (eds) Encyclopaedia of European Elections, Basingstoke, Palgrave, 207–12.
- Hesse, K. (1962) Der unitarische Bundesstaat, Karlsruhe, C. F. Müller.
- Hough, D. and Olsen J. (2007) The Left Party in Contemporary German Politics, Basingstoke, Palgrave.
- Jesse, E. and Lang, J. (2008) Die Linke. Der smarte Extremismus einer deutschen Partei, München, Olzog.
- Katz, R. and Mair, P. S. (1995) 'Changing Models of Party Organization and Party Democracy', Party Politics, 1 (1), 5–28.
- Katzenstein, P. J. (1987) Policy and Politics in West Germany: The Growth of the Semi-Sovereign Polity, Philadelphia, Temple University Press.
- Katzenstein, P. J. (1997) 'United Germany in an Integrating Europe', in Katzenstein P. J. (ed.) Tamed Power: Germany in Europe, Ithaca, Cornell University Press, 1–47.

- Korte, K. R. (2009) Wahlkampfkosten, Dossier Bundestagswahlen. Online. Available at: www.bpb.de/themen/UZRZTH,0,Wahlkampfkosten.html (accessed on 8 September 2010).
- Landeszentrale für politische Bildung (2009) 'Europawahl 2009', Baden-Württemberg. Online. Available at: www.europawahl-bw.de/2765.html (accessed on 7 September 2010).
- Maull, H. W. (1990) 'Germany and Japan: The New Civilian Powers', Foreign Affairs, 69(5), 91–106.
- Menke, K. (1985) 'Germany' in Reif, K. H. (ed.) Ten European Elections. Campaigns and Results of the 1979/81 First Direct Elections to the European Parliament, Aldershot, Gower, 67–84.
- Müller-Graff, P. (2010) Das Lissabon-Urteil: Implikationen für die Europapolitik, Aus Politik und Zeitgeschichte, B18, 22–9.
- Niedermayer, O. (2005) 'Europa als Randthema: Der Wahlkampf und die Wahlkampfstrategien der Parteien?' in Niedermayer O. and Schmitt H. (eds) Europawahl 2004, Wiesbaden, Verlag Sozialwissenschaften, 39–75.
- Niedermayer, O. (2007) 'Das Parteiensystem Deutschlands' in Niedermayer O., Stöss R. and Haas, M. (eds) Die Parteiensysteme Westeuropas, Wiesbaden, Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften, 109–33.
- Paterson, W. E. (2005) 'European Policy-making: Between Associated Sovereignty and Semi-sovereignty' in Patterson W. E. and Green S. (eds) Governance in Contemporary Germany. The Semi-Sovereign State Revisited, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press, 261–82.
- Paterson, W. E. (2010) 'Does Germany Still Have a European Vocation?' German Politics, 19(1), 41–52.
- Paterson, W. E., Lee, Ch. and Green, Simon (1996) 'The Federal Republic of Germany', in Lodge, J. (ed.) The 1994 Elections to the European Parliament, London, Pinter, 66–83.
- Rudzio, W. (2006) Das politische System der Bundesrepublik Deutschland, 7. Auflage. Wiesbaden, Verlag der Sozialwissenschaften.
- Saalfeld, T. (2005) 'Political Parties', in Green, S. and Patterson, W. E. (eds) Governance in Contemporary Germany. The Semisovereign State Revisited, Cambridge, Cambridge University Press, 46–77.
- Scheuer, A. and Schmitt, H. (2009) 'Sources of EU Support: The Case of Germany', German Politics 18(4), 577–90.
- Schieder, S. (2011) 'Problematising Europe, or Evidence of an Emergent Euroscepticism?' in Harmsen, R. and Schild, J. (eds) Debating Europe: The 2009 European Parliament Elections and Beyond, Baden-Baden, Nomos, 33–51.
- Schild, J. (2003) 'Die Europäisierung nationaler politischer Identität in Deutschland und Frankreich', Aus Politik und Zeitgeschichte, B3–4, 31–49.
- Schmitt, H. (1996) 'Germany: A Bored Electorate', in Van der Eijk C. and Franklin M. N. (eds) Choosing Europe? The European Electorate and National Politics in the Face of Union, Ann Arbor, The University of Michigan Press, 137–56.
- Schweitzer, E. J. (2004) 'Der Einsatz des Internets im Europawahlkampf. Ergebnisse einer Inhalts- und Strukturanalyse nationaler Partei- und Kampagnen-Websites zur Europawahl 2004', in Holtz-Bacha, C. (2005a) (ed.) Europawahl 2004, Die Massenmedien im Europawahlkampf, Wiesbaden, Verlag für Sozialwissenschaften, 123–52.
- Süddeutsche Zeitung* (2008) 'Eine Abstimmung mit hohem Symbolwert', 8, December 2008, 6.
- Trechsel, A. H. (2009) 'How Much "Second-Order" Were the European Parliament Elections 2009?', in Gagatsek, W. (ed.) The 2009 Elections to the European Parliament. Country Reports, Florence, European University Institute, 3–13.
- Viola, D. M. (2010) 'Le elezioni europee del 2009 in Germania fra crisi dei partiti e indifferenza popolare'. Online. Available at: www.officinadellastoria.it (accessed on 5 December 2013).
- Wilkens, A. (2004) 'Désir d'Europe et réalités nationales: l'opinion publique allemande et la construction européenne', in Dunphy, A. and Manigand, C. (eds) Public Opinion and Europe. National Identities and the European Integration Process, Berne, Peter Lang, 63–77.